Saturday night horse thieves stole several horses of a man named Nichols, south of Radium, and after an all day hunt Sunday by the citizens of many miles around, the horses were found in a neighbors pasture. It is supposed that the thieves got cold feet and turned the horses loose, for fear of being caught, as they were seen taking them out of the pasture by a neighbor boy, and another neighbor met them on the road later. It is probably a good thing that they decided as they did, or they might have gotten something they were not looking for.

For Better Dairying.

Kansas ought to be, and is destined to become, one of the leading dairy states in the union. Dairying is, perhaps, one of the most permanently profitable specialties of farming. The whole problem of developing the industry, of increasing the quality of the dairy products of the state, the inspection of the skimming, cream buying and manufacturing plants of the state, the inspection of testing cream, etc., rests in the office of the dairy commissioner. This office is connected with the agricultural college, where dairy husbandry is taught. Nearly 300 farmers and cream buyers are taking the Short Course in dairying this winter. This means high class dairying, improved manufacturers, better butter, increased incomes, more comfortable homes.

To conduct successfully the office of dairy commissioner, with its constantly increasing duties, and wide-spread influence, the board of regents has asked the legislature to appropriate $7,500 in 1912-12 and the same amount in 1912-13.—Kansas Industrialist.

The Good Road Did It.

What does good roads mean to a rural school? What does a good road mean to a rural community socially?

A certain township in southeast Kansas saw fit to construct two miles of rock road from a small town south through a rural district. Six children of school age lived on farms adjacent to those to the rock road, and six on the same length of road in the west part of the school district. The earth road was in poor condition most of the time.

The Children on the good road went to city schools, walking most of the time. The children on the almost impassible earth road went to a rural school. At that time the instruction in the town school was not any better than the rural school, in the common branches. The city school was not what it ought to have been. The rural school was noted for its excellent instructors.

Two of the children living on the rock road are now sophomores in agricultural colleges, two are seniors in high school, and two are freshmen in high school. All of them are interested in agriculture, will graduate from agricultural courses, and return to the farm.

Two children living adjacent to the earth road finished the rural school. Their interest in education was balanced against the almost impassible condition of the road the greater part of the school year. Now they are hardly average farmers. Four became discouraged and quit the rural school before they were graduated. Three of them are day laborers in a nearby town. The fourth is owner of a small restaurant in the same town.

The children of the rock road walked to church, Sunday School, and lectures, and attended the social events in town and in the country adjacent to the rock road.

It hardly seems possible that a stretch of two to four miles of poor road would make such a difference in one's life, does it? But it did.—Kansas Industrialist.
