THE LABOR SITUATION IN STATE OF OREGON

Fifteen Hundred Men Appear Daily at Federal Employment Office at Portland. Busiest Place.

(By United Press.)
Portland, Jan. 23.—Probably the busiest place in Oregon at the present time is the office of the United States employment service, which is presided over by Willfred F. Smith, federal director, who declared today that there are approximately 6,000 men out of employment in Oregon at this time.

The federal employment service has launched a campaign for the purpose of seeking ways and means through of the returning soldier and sailor may immediately fall into a position upon reaching home, and has established in every county a soldiers' and sailors' bureau, with which it is in close communication.

Agencies co-operating with the government service are the state of Oregon, the Red Cross and others, reaching into every nook and corner of the state.

Up until the first of the year, there was no unemployment problem in Oregon, for prior to that time, the supply and demand in the labor market were about equal. But reports received daily at the office of the federal director indicated the trend toward an unemployment situation, and steps were taken at once to meet any emergency that might arise.

While the United States employment service is making a special effort to place the returned soldier and sailor in immediate employment, it has not relaxed its efforts in the interest of the mechanic, the farm hand or the common laborer. To take care of the soldier employment scheme, a separate division has been established at Liberty temple, with Capt. James O. Conwill in charge. Figures show that of the 650 discharged soldiers who called at the office in the past week 350 were placed. Many of the others did not register for work.

Fifteen hundred men have appeared daily, during the past week at the main employment office. Only 1,835 registered for employment in that period. Seventy-four per cent of them were given work.

BUTTE WOMEN'S CLUB HAS FINE AFTERNOON

Meeting Largely Attended and Took on Aspect of Before-War Times.

The members of Butte Women's club yesterday afternoon enjoyed what is termed by the members as a regular old time before the war meeting and there was a large attendance to enjoy a most excellent music and literary program and a delightful menu of refreshments.

It was decided to hold the observance of the anniversary of the club Feb. 26, at which time an elaborate program will be prepared for the edification of the members.

During the business portion of the program yesterday, Mrs. C. P. Irish was elected to the board of trustees of the club.

REPEAL GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF WIRES

Opponents of Government Ownership Would Return Wires to Private Control. Increased Tolls Probable.

(Special United Press Wire.)
Washington, Jan. 23.—A resolution for the immediate repeal of government wire control may be introduced in the house within the next few days.

Encouraged by their success in burying in committee the bill to take over the wire systems of the country, opponents of government ownership are considering measures to return the wires and cables to the companies; the postoffice department is determined to show the state-utilities commission just who is running the country and the telephone service.

Adopting the attitude of ignoring these states' regulatory bodies, the wire administration declared that increased tolls will be put into effect and collected and that only court injunctions will be recognized by the postoffice department as having power to head off the increased rates.

Officials insist that the wires were taken over as an act of war and that states will have nothing to say about tolls unless the wires are returned to private control.

A Flower from His Grave

Another Martyr in the Great Cause—Cornelius Lehane. By IDA CROUCH-HAZLETT.

I slept—and the rain was falling—
The solemn, the sorrowful rain;
And a dream crept out from the shadows.

To the stately cadence of pain.
'Twas a roll of sonorous music.
The deep-toned boom of the drum;
And warriors who bury a hero
In martial measure come.

A dream of the dead—
"But whence," I said—
"Does the fateful vision come?"

In the morning they brought me a flower.
A blood-red bloom from his grave;
And the grief-bowed comrades bore
To his rest.

One whom the Iron Heel had pressed:
The brother from over the wave.
He, of the Great Companions,
His life, his hope, and his brain
Had laid on the altar of Freedom—
Its soldiers—the Irish Lehane.

Yes, tortured by greed in power,
By the Hosts of Oppression slain,
As vengeful as o'er in the age-dark world.
Was the warrior—the Irish Lehane.
Toll the bell;
Ring his knell;
They have murdered our comrade, Lehane.

Long months in the dungeon's horrors,
Hungry and cold and alone,
Held incommunicado,
No hand-clasp, no friendly tone;
Nor book, nor pen—but torture
Of fiends by night, by day,
Till the strong man's nerve and fiber
Trembled to swift decay.

For never a crime
But the Cause sublime,
The Great Revolution that flames
On its way—
The wrath of the Toilers that Flames on its way.

In his weakness disease stalked
stealthily—
Snatched its prey from the dun-geon's jaws;
From the courts of infamous tyrants,
And those who die on law;
From the temples of shame
That defile the fame
Of Liberty's glorious name.

And now but a grave in a foreign land;
A land far over the sea
From his own green Isle with its wave-kissed shores,
And its passionate cry to be free;
With its heroes who walk to their death with a smile.
That the home of their hearts may be free.

And my dream was the dream of the Martyrs,
In every age and clime,
Who march to death and glory
With the splendor of deed sublime;
To the solemn roll of the dead, dead
march.
As it soiled through the halls of Time.

We may draps not his grave with the standards of Freedom, Scarlet, blood-dyed with wound of the poor.
'Tis the masters forbid; but the crimson carnations
That spring from his bleeding breast bloom evermore
In the hearts of the brave;
In a fairer, surer world,
With no master, no slave,
Labor's banners unfurled;
And a grand, swelling chorus of Peace to the world.

Cornelius Lehane was an Irish socialist who helped to organize the social-democratic party in Ireland.
He came to this country in 1914, on account of the persecution against the radicals engendered by the war.
He was routed by the national office,
and toured every section of the Union for several years. Last summer he was arrested in Hartford, Conn., where the persecution of the socialists was especially bitter, and the case was pressed against him with excessive brutality. He was kept in a dark cell 180 days, with a light flashed on him ever hour; no one allowed to see him, and given no books or writing materials. When the socialist attorneys finally got him out on heavy bonds he was a physical wreck, the one fine frame trembling with weakness, and his constitution so undermined that he fell an easy prey to influenza, and died at Bellevue hospital.

SOCIALISTS HIGH IN ELECTIONS

(Special United Press Wire.)
Copenhagen, Jan. 22.—The latest returns indicate the election to the German national assembly of 114 majority socialists; democrats, 53; Christian people's party, 46; national party, 24; independent socialists, 19; people's party (pan-Germans), 11.
