GOLD. Wide-wasting pest that wages unconfined. And crowds with crimes the records of mankind. For gold his sword the hireling ruffian draws; For gold the hireling judge distorts the laws— Wealth heaped on wealth nor peace nor safety buys. The dangers gather as the treasures rise. —Samuel Johnson.

CAN WORKERS RUN THE WORLD

(The bolshevik revolution in Russia, the struggle to establish a proletarian dictatorship in Germany; the programs of the labor movement throughout Europe and the premonitory symptoms of revolt here at home, are forcing even the American middle-class to face the prospect of a future in which the working-people will own and manage industry. That prospect is agitating some minds with the question, "But how can they do it?"—accompanied usually by an anguished wringing of the hands. We would have of course every confidence that they could do it, even if it were as futuristic a problem as the question implies. But it should give us a quiet satisfaction to realize that, even outside of Russia, the question has already been answered in the affirmative by the working people's co-operatives all over the world. The solid proofs which these co-operatives afford of the people's ability to run their own affairs economically as well as politically are described briefly in what follows. The author of this article is, as he pointedly remarks, "engaged in the co-operative movement not primarily because of interest in co-operation, but primarily because of interest in revolution.")

Before the war, the co-operative movement in Europe was growing five times faster than the population; today it is growing ten times faster. In several European countries it now embraces more than one-half of the population. In America, heretofore most backward in co-operation, its growth during the past two years has exceeded that in any preceding 10 years.

There are now about 2,000 co-operative societies in the United States. A survey three years ago reported 700. They used to fail; now they are succeeding. The Co-operative League of America functions as a central organization to which these societies look for propaganda, education and guidance. Around Puget Sound is a group of 50 societies which have grown up in labor unions. As an illustration of what they can do, the Seattle society took over the public market and proceeded to supply its members with groceries and meats. This market now does a business of $700,000 a month, with a saving (commonly called "profit") of $20,000 a month over all operating expenses. They take milk directly from the farms; what their membership do not consume they evaporate and put up in their own canning factory. They have three co-operative bakeries, with restaurants, club rooms and reading rooms attached. Whenever the co-operators need capital the unions supply it. They are now organizing their own flour mill, and a committee is at work on a banking system.

All through the northern states are the societies of agricultural workers and industrial workers. In Illinois is a group of 75 societies among the United Mine Workers, slowly crowding out capitalistic business from the mining towns. A group of societies among the garment workers of Chicago conducts a school for co-operative education with 500 pupils. Western Pennsylvania has a federation of 70 societies. Many of these organizations own their own buildings, issue monthly, weekly and daily periodicals from their own printing plants, and carry on recreational activities. Six different groups in the United States are federated into wholesales. At the first national co-operative convention, in 1918, these six wholesales federated into a single national wholesaler. This is the beginning of the new era. The technique of this movement by which the people take business out of private hands and administer it themselves in their own interest has been systematically worked out, proved and standardized. A society of people, in the spirit of mutual aid, begin by organizing as their own storekeepers, to supply themselves with the bodily necessities of life. Each individual subscribes to at least one share of stock. Three fundamentals are observed: (1) Each member has one vote and no more; (2) invested capital receives interest limited to the current or legal rate, and (3) the savings (or profits) of the business are not apportioned to the capital but are returned to the members in proportion to the amount of their purchases or are retained in the society and used for social purposes.

With these simple provisions the society proceeds with its business. From an economic standpoint it saves its members the retailers' profit and protects them against short weight and adulteration. Its next step is affiliation with other societies into a co-operative wholesale. Then the members add to their savings the middlemen's profits. The wholesale then proceeds to manufacture, and when this step is taken the people are producing for their own use, and the revolution is attained. The economic saving is the entering wedge only. The same organization is used to supply every other social and personal need. Thus are provided by the people through their free societies, all of those things which the socialist states aim to provide. Steadily without haste, without rest—co-operation is growing and widening its way into the economic and social life of today, crowding out the old, supplanting the vicious and outworn.

This co-operative movement disregards the political state. It is closely allied in every country with the labor movement. It is labor's necessary companion. While the labor union aims to control the wages that labor shall receive co-operation aims to control the prices that the wages of labor shall pay for the necessities of life. All this is not a dream of the possibilities of the future. It is a hope come true. Against the arguments to discredit the ability of the people to administer their own affairs stands one mighty fact—the co-operative movement.—James Peter Warbasse in Liberator.
