WARNS RETURNING SOLDIERS AGAINST POLITICAL CROOKS

Gen. Isaac R. Sherwood Says World War Fighters Should Control Own Organization.

Washington, May 20.—Gen. Isaac R. Sherwood, member of a congress from Ohio and long prominent in the affairs of the Grand Army of the Republic, has issued a friendly warning to the returning soldiers not to permit themselves to be enrolled in organizations which they themselves can not control.

This warning, which appears in a signed interview published in a military journal (The American Army Gazette) has attracted wide attention here, where the developments at the St. Louis caucus of the American Legion have been closely followed by men in public life.

Says the Civil war veteran to the veterans of this latest war:

"Of course, the soldiers of this world war will organize. All soldiers of all wars since the Declaration of Independence have organized. George Washington organized what was known as the Order of Cincinnati, made up exclusively of the officers

DEAD AMERICAN RULES PEACE TABLE

Paris Editor Says the Monroe Doctrine Conflicts With League of Nations' Covenant.

By WILLIAM PHILIP SMITH (United Press Staff Correspondent).
Paris. (By Mail).—Stephen Langan, editor of "Le Martin," considers that it will be impossible ever to reconcile the Monroe doctrine with the idea of a league of nations. He said in Le Martin:

"If things continue to go as they are going now Monroe will finish the biggest figure in the peace conference. At present his is the only figure before which everybody bows.

"Who was Monroe?"
"Monroe was born in a carpenter shop and as time went on, engaged in most all the trades. He was colonel, lawyer, merchant, judge, ambassador, secretary of state. Moreover, he did all of them well.

"In 1817 he became president of the United States.
"About that time a political tempest was blowing strong in the old world. United under the name of the 'Holy Alliance,' the European governments talked of nothing less than the establishment of an absolutism, first in Europe, then in America.

"Monroe saw storm-clouds coming his way and called his old friend, Thomas Jefferson, philosopher and friend of the French philosopher, d'Alembert and Condorcet, in a consultation. Whereupon Jefferson wrote:

"America, both north and south, has interests absolutely distinct from those of Europe and which belong to her alone. It is necessary, therefore, to establish the principles of a system which shall keep these interests separate from those of the old world. While the latter is trying to make itself the home of despotism our hemisphere is trying to make itself the land of liberty."

"Monroe found the suggestion good, so on Dec. 2, 1823, in an address to congress at Washington, he put the idea into slightly different words. He said:

"Our politics has always consisted, and always should consist, in taking no part in European wars. Also we have always abstained from intervening in the affairs of the colonies or dependencies of European nations and we shall continue so to do. But for those which have won their independence and obtained recognition as states, we cannot but consider as an act hostile to the United States any intervention having for object the oppression or control in any manner whatever, of the destinies of these same."

"There it was! It was done! A new doctrine was born.

"Now is this doctrine of Monroe violated by the league of nations' project?"

"It seems to me monumentally paradoxical and a trifle infantile to pretend the contrary.

"When the executive council of the league of nations fixes the reasonable limits of the armament of Peru; when it shall demand information concerning the naval program of Brazil (Art. 8 of the covenant); when it shall tell Argentina what shall be the measure of the contribution to the armed forces to protect the signatures of the social covenant (Art. 16); when it shall demand the immediate registration of the treaty between the United States and Canada at the seat of the league, it will control, whether it wills or no, the destinies of America. And when the American states shall be obliged to take a hand in every war or menace of war in Europe (Art. 11), they will necessarily fall afoul of the fundamental principle laid down by Monroe which was that Americans should never take part in a European war.

"If the league takes in the world, then Europe must mix in the affairs of America; if only Europe is included, then America will violate of necessity her own doctrine by intermixing in the affairs of Europe."

"Whether the new organization, embracing the soldiers of this war for democracy, should organize in separate groups, is a serious question. My own idea is that all the soldiers, whether serving as officers or as privates, should form one common brotherhood, recognizing no distinction as to rank.

"One of the mistakes made in the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic was to give those soldiers holding positions as post commander, and as state commander and national commander, preference over the rank and file in all its deliberations in state and national encampments by making said officers life delegates. These for-life delegates have now become so numerous and powerful that they control and dominate the deliberations of the national encampments of the Grand Army. While they may not be so numerous as the duly elected delegates from Grand Army posts, they are better organized and more familiar with parliamentary proceedings.

"This system has always appealed to me as being undemocratic and un-American, if not absolutely unfair to the great body of men who stood behind the guns, and who have not received official honors. It has also created what is called a 'house of lords,' which has been able to control largely the deliberations and policies of the Grand Army for the past quarter of a century.

"In other words, I believe that the coming soldier organization, which is bound to be the greatest in the history of this republic, should be controlled in all its deliberations and policies and aims by a majority of the men who stood behind the guns, which constitute the numerous bodies of all soldier organizations. It should be, in fact, an organization to promote in the present and in the future that vital spirit of democracy which was the animating and inspiring force that sent our armies to the battle fields of France. It should be an organization that will appeal to the patriotic spirit of all loyal and true Americans."

Jack Adams, the Phillies catcher, is among the best in the National league. He can throw like a shot.

On the other hand, McGraw seems to need another catcher, as McCarty's throwing has not been up to the mark.

Horzog and Maravilla are kicking up the dust in lively style around the Braves' middle bag.

The suspicions of Arthur Fletcher that a trick glove was being used were aroused in a recent game between the Giants and the Braves at the Polo grounds. When Northrup relieved Rudolph on the mound for the Braves in the fifth inning, Fletcher called upon Umpire Klem to examine the pitcher's glove for traces of "smery paper or other foreign substances which, applied to the ball, cause it to take queer twists in its journey to the plate. Klem did as he was asked, but evidently found nothing. Fletcher's action was undoubtedly prompted by knowledge of the fact that Ray Keating, formerly with the Yankees and now a member of the Braves' staff, is an emery ball "artist," and by the suspicion that he might have taught his trick to the youngster.

Willie Lewis' 35th birthday. Willie Lewis, the veteran New York middleweight, who now makes his living as a trainer and manager, will celebrate his thirty-fifth birthday tomorrow. He quit the ring about four years ago, after a career that covered about 15 years. He returned to the United States from Paris shortly after the outbreak of the war in 1914, and was matched with Al McCoy. He showed none of his old-time form, and the imitation champion knocked him out in the fifth round. In February, 1915, Lewis went to Havana to meet Young Ahern and the announced that the $1,000 he was to get would be the $1,000 he would earn in the ring.

Lewis went to Paris in 1909 and the boxing enthusiasts there thought he was the greatest ever. He liked Paris so well that he decided to settle down in the French capital, and invested all his available cash in a fine gymnasium. He was doing a land office business teaching boxing to Parisian bloods, when the war came along and put him out of business. Lewis was in his home at Chantilly when the Germans made their swoon toward Paris, and he got out in a hurry. He had some exciting experiences getting out of the country, but he finally managed to return to the land of his birth.

SPRING-NEAT BATTLE WAS EXCITING CONTEST
Tom Spring defeated Bill Neat, in the eighth round at Andover, England, on this date in 1823. By this battle, one of the most exciting contests in English prize ring history, Tom Spring became the champion. The aristocratic sports were there by the hundreds, and the humbler followers of the game who gathered on the turf numbered well up into the thousands. Neat had an inch the advantage in height, standing half an inch over 6 feet, and both were about the same weight. They began by sparring cautiously and Spring got in the first solid blow. Both men displayed much science in stopping and dodging punches. Tom had the margin in the first round, to the great surprise of the country folk, for they had dubbed Spring "The China Man" and "The Lady's Maid Fighter," and did not expect him to last long before a slagger like Neat. Within a few minutes the marvelous fighting spirit of Bill Neat, the latter had won all his former fights by bull-like rushes, but he soon tired of wading into Spring's blows, and became cautious. For all that he fought gamely and bravely, and the bout was full of action and wildly exciting until the eighth round, when Neat, having broken his right arm, gave up the struggle.

Miss Croix and Mrs. Wardlaw were tackling the league of nations. Miss Croix is sure it is the one thing which will defeat bolshevism, and Mrs. Wardlaw insists that it is the first step in the direction of soviet government. However, they conclude to call it a draw and go look at hats.
