Margaret Bondfield Speaks on Labor

(Special to the Bulletin by Mail.) Atlantic City, N. J., June 13.—Today was field day for fraternal delegates. Margaret Bondfield and S. Finney represented England; Thomas Walsh, Canada; and R. Suzuki, Japan. Santiago Iglesias, who usually comes to talk about Porto Rico has not arrived.

Labor Government for England. Miss Bondfield made a vivacious address and got warm applause. Finney was more staid in speech, as he is in appearance. He predicted a labor government next for England. Walsh was a bit fiery. He said there are two main extremes in the Canadian labor movement now, one conservative and one radical. He hoped that soon they'd hit a sound middle course. Suzuki smiled a happy smile and said his aspiration was for continued expansion of democratic opportunities. He put in a strong word for the league of nations.

Here are some of the things Miss Bondfield said: "It is very vital indeed that the American Federation of Labor and the British Trades Union congress work together. No country alone can work out industrial salvation. The methods to be adopted must meet local circumstances. I am profoundly convinced each must find the methods suited to its soil, its temperament and conditions."

"We feel that we are in the travail of the birth of a new world. It depends upon the labor forces whether that world is a better one than the old one. Out of a dark night we are looking toward a very gray dawn at present."

"Who won the war? Well, we are terribly anxious to know who won the peace and we are confident that it is a fundamental thing to know how the labor movement can use its forces for a lasting peace."

"During the war we never lost the sense of those things that mean liberty. Whenever we felt that the spirit of patriotism was being used for profiteering or selfish ends there was an immediate flare-up and reaction."

"When you are told that agitators stirred up strikes during the war don't you believe it. It was the government that stirred up strikes."

Miss Bondfield then discussed the recent industrial conference in London, in which recognition of organized employers and organized workers agreed upon and said, "No employer in our country can be considered respectable if he refused now to meet the responsible officials of the workers concerned."

Bed-Makers Organize. "Organization has been rapid, the speaker said. Latest to organize are the bed-makers of Oxford and Cambridge, women of 60 years of age, who now ask a living wage."

Talking of political action she told of the recent fight for control of London's educational board. "Tracing back," she said, "to find what changed the German nation into a militarist state, it was found in the rescript of 1859 in which the Kaiser instructed the teaching faculty to produce in the schools the militarist type of mind."

Miss Bondfield informed the convention that she belonged to the "left" of the labor movement, which is the most radical side of it. Her speech left little doubt of it.

Brown Starts Something. When Kirk Brown got after Basil Manly before the Manufacturers' Council of New Jersey at Trenton yesterday, he started something. Passing a resolution calling upon the president to remove Manly as joint chairman of the National War Labor board didn't help matters any. The resolution said that because of his men who control American industry and are accustomed to do big things in a big way were summoned to the conference, and that it was the small manufacturer who was causing most of the trouble by his failure to understand that we have entered a new industrial era. The action of Mr. Brown and his colleagues of the New Jersey Manufacturers' council seem to prove that I was right.

"Are you a socialist?" Manly was asked. "No," he said. "Are you a bolshevik?" "No." "Do you throw bombs?" "No."

Then he added, "I possess certain information which I hope may prove of use. When I know things I try to make that knowledge serve some purpose."
