About A. Lincoln

By GEORGE LANSBURY in London Herald.

John Drinkwater's play, "Abraham Lincoln," reached its 150th performance on Thursday last. It was my good fortune to see the play, for the first time, on Wednesday and now I want all my friends and readers of the Daily Herald to go and do likewise. From the moment the curtain went up to the very last sob from the servant maid mourning the death of her master my whole mind was fixed on the stage and the players. Somehow or other to hear the dear old song, "John Brown's body lies mouldering in the grave, but his soul goes marching on," roused in me all the deepest feelings of loyalty and devotion to the cause of the people of which I long to be capable.

"The End is Not Yet."

I have often been stirred to the depths listening to Irish people singing "God Save Ireland," Welshmen singing "Land of Our Fathers," and Scots singing "Annie Laurie," but none of these give me the same sort of thrill as does that song which first was sung when I was a boy of six, and which I had understood that governments may kill the body but thank God, can never kill the soul of man. Listening to the words of John Brown on his way to execution, "The end is not yet," I thought of Pichon and Churchill and the other small men who imagine it is possible to kill the spirit of revolt and destroy the souls of men with machine guns.

The saying, "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church" is as true today as when Luther and Ridley cheered each other with the thought that by their death a light would be lighted in England which would never go out. John Brown at Harper's Ferry in 1859 set the whole people of America ablaze with a desire for freedom and freedom of a new sort, applicable to all men and all women. Lincoln took the banner of race equality from John Brown and bore it triumphantly to victory. Reading the life of Lincoln in cold print, and seeing his life and struggles represented on the stage, makes it possible to understand something of the loneliness which the truly great ones of the earth are called upon to endure. I suppose it is true, as Ibsen says, "The strongest men are they who stand most alone." In the play though, and in the biographies I have read, Lincoln was never really alone. In the very darkest hour and in the hour of triumph he felt himself guided, directed, controlled by a power greater than himself.

The True Victory.

Today we all need the spirit of greatness with which John Drinkwater has surrounded his hero. The war between north and south in America was a severe and bitter one. It looked at times as if that continent would never recover, as if the hatred engendered would never die down; but to Lincoln, and after him to men like Grant, belongs the great glory that not only were they victorious over the south, but they were also conquerors of hatred by substituting mercy and love for hatred and violence.

All this week the British press, to its everlasting shame, has reeked of nothing but hatred, and has appeared to float over the very remotest possibility of more bloodshed, more killing and maiming of Germans. It only Wilson or Lloyd George had been a Lincoln, how different would the outlook be today! I take back no word of pacifism I have ever spoken or written when I say this: it is not a defense or excuse for the civil war. What I am thinking about is Lincoln's strict adherence to principle, his determination to be just, even to his enemies, and his steady persistence in the work of pacification.

The Life-Giver.

As our leaders have failed us, we will waste no time on them. As there is no Lincoln at Paris, we who desire a peace of love and reconciliation must get together and do the work he would be doing if he were here. It is the spirit which gives us life, not the spoken or written word, and all of us can do our part in helping to spread abroad the spirit of love and understanding. We need this spirit not only in connection with the Germans, but in our dealings with each other and with all men. We socialists talk of our international love and comradeship, and yet how little there is among ourselves! How can we love the foreigner whom we have not seen if we do not love our brother man here at our doors? Our "movement," as it is called, needs us all. We each have something to give, but none of us have exactly the same gifts to offer. All of us, though, can be tolerant, eager to believe, and anxious always to serve. As I think of Britain and labor today, I wonder whence will come the force which shall unify us? Lincoln had the root of the matter in him when in his humility he fell on his knees to commune with God and from that communion was able to rise a better and stronger man, capable of great decisions, and with the courage to stand alone.

The Glory of Going On.

Our task is a much greater one. We have to carry his victory a step further on the road towards real freedom. Chattel slavery is abolished, but there is still indentured labor in British dominions. In our midst there are racial hatreds engendered by the venom distilled from the press. Our task is to secure economic freedom at home and abroad, but, as in the days of Lincoln, we, too, shall need that spiritual fervor which makes a man cry out even in the depths of despair, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him."

I want to catch, and want you also to catch, the spirit of John Brown's marching song in death. Others may tell of Drake. His great sea fights may all be very glorious, but give us "the glory of going on and still to be." John Brown's soul is going on today. His spirit marches with us because it is the eternal spirit of love, of peace, and of truth.

With the Editors

When the treaty was signed President Wilson sent a message to the London Weekly Dispatch. The last paragraph read:

"We stand at the crossroads, however, and the way is only pointed out. Those who saw through the travail of war a vision of the world made secure for mankind, must now consecrate their lives to its realization."

Those who saw through the travail of the war a vision of the world made secure for mankind, do not see that safety for which humanity has longed throughout the ages in the proposed League of Nations.

Seven and a half million men who fought for safety for mankind and freedom for all forever consecrated their lives to this cause and sleep beneath the battle fields of Europe. Did not these 7,500,000 make sacrifice enough to bring safety to mankind?

The war was fought to a definite conclusion. No compromise with the foe was accepted. The representatives of the allied governments were in a position to draw the new world constitution for which the hosts of humanity were longing. A constitution which would have given to those who must go to the slaughter house of war the right to vote as to whether or not there should be wars.

The League of Nations does not point the way ahead. It points along the road to yesterday, to closed doors, to diplomats who are the lackeys of profit seeking autocrats of exploitation. It would send the vital affairs of the world back into the careless hands of the few, instead of putting them in the hands of the many.

Seven and a half million men are dead, $177,000,000,000 have been spent to make the world secure for mankind.

The League of Nations does not make it secure. It does not change the old war making processes of industry. Already the papers are ablaze with the fight already on for commercial supremacy.

If the League of Nations is the best the allied representatives have to offer, it is not good enough. It does not carry those vital things for which the sacrifices of the war were made. Seven and a half million men yielding their lives should not be a mere sign-post pointing somewhere. It should be a sacred pledge that humanity never again shall be overcome by the catastrophe of war.

The people are not concerned with the interests of bankers and financiers, they are concerned with making a world without wars. And the people are the only ones who can bring this about.

The League of Nations should be put to a vote, and it should be defeated, and in its stead should be established a world League of Peoples which will unite the people of the world by the operation of industry throughout the world for service instead of profit.

The consecration and the sacrifice has been too great to permit the peace to be a Bankers' peace instead of a Peoples' peace.—Minneapolis Labor Review.

AUTOIST ACQUITTED ON RECKLESSNESS CHARGE

Frank Kane was acquitted in police court this morning on a charge of reckless driving. Yesterday afternoon the machine which he was driving struck August Bumbalad, a street car employee.

The testimony of three witnesses and of Mr. Kane himself indicated that he was driving slowly and that only Mr. Bumbalad was to blame. The latter, according to the testimony, had been engrossed in a conversation on the curb with a friend, but upon seeing the street car on which he expected to ride home start to leave the corner of Park and Main, he suddenly hastened toward it, and in doing so carelessly stepped directly in front of the auto, which was running at about five miles and hour and was stopped instantly, but not before it had pushed Bumbalad over.

Mr. Bumbalad's leg was broken. The car did not run over him, but when he was pushed over, the bone snapped. One of the eye-witnesses testified that he heard it clearly.

"What is a mobil army?" "It's a large army," said Ford. "I don't know much about military affairs."

Stevenson tried to get Ford to admit that he did not know who was in the famous peace advertisement bearing his signature. Ford said Theodore Lavigne wrote it under instructions to stick closely to facts.

"You mean you want the jury to understand you circulated those big advertisements without knowing what was in them?" asked Stevenson.

"I didn't know," Stevenson produced the Tribune editorial which is the basis of the million dollar libel suit. "Please read it," he said, but Ford asked to be excused. Stevenson read it.

James H. Rowe Appeals From $10 Fine. Parked Car Shut Off Passage.

That James H. Rowe, real estate dealer, shining light in the Employers' association, and erstwhile paper board, did not bring himself to submit graciously, like the common herd of less distinguished patriots, to the traffic ordinances of the city of Butte, became manifest this morning, when the gentleman filed an appeal to the district court from a recent decision of Police Judge H. J. Griggs.

On July 10 Detective Van Orden filed a complaint against Rowe charging him with violating the parking regulations. Detectives Gerry and Van Orden had found Rowe's car parked on Main street near the corner of Park street—a very congested center—with the front wheels about two and a half feet from the curb and the hind end something like eight feet from the curb. The automobile, testified the officers, practically shut off the passage for vehicles between it and the street car tracks. The officers summoned Mr. Rowe to appear in police court the next day and explain.

Police Judge Griggs found Mr. Rowe guilty as charged and fined him $10. Rowe seemed to be much displeased by the whole proceeding. He said he had been parking his car in Butte for years past and had never been compelled to appear in police court before—much less had he ever been convicted and fined. Mr. Rowe said he felt that an injustice had been done him by the police court, and immediately served notice of appeal. Today Attorney J. A. Poore, in behalf of Rowe filed the appeal and the $100 appeal bond, signed by E. S. Slemmons and J. H. Durstian.

NEW ENLISTMENT TERMS IN UNITED STATES NAVY

Naval Appropriation Bill approved July 11, 1919, provides in part "Until June 30, 1920, enlistments in the navy may be made for terms of two, three and four years, and all laws now applicable to four years enlistment shall apply under such regulations as may be prescribed by the secretary of the navy to enlistments for a shorter period, with proportionate benefits upon discharge or re-enlistment."

Enlistments are authorized for two, three and four years, at option of recruit in all ratings now open for first enlistment, except that applicants for machinist mate school, and for aviation mechanics school, will not be enlisted for a shorter period than three years.

Minors under 18 years of age may be enlisted for two or three years, or period of minority, at their option with consent of parent or guardian, as before. Men re-enlisting for two, three or four years, are entitled to extra pay for re-enlistment under continuous service, extra pay for citizenship, and to two thirds of four months honorably discharge gratuity respectively, if re-enlisting after honorably discharged.

Present war pay now permanent for men during current enlistment, and for all men enlisting or re-enlisting prior to July 1, 1920, for the term of such enlistment or re-enlistment. Any man who has served any portion of enlistment during the war and has an honorable discharge who re-enlists within four months from the date of such discharge, receives all these benefits as if he had done a full four-year enlistment.

The navy department has decided that any man who has served for the duration of the war or received a good discharge, are to be considered as honorably discharged, and will receive all the benefits as above mentioned.

MONTANA LEGISLATURE

It appearing, further, that legislative enactment is necessary to bring about the relief of those who were unfortunate enough to have lost their crops by drought; and it appearing, further, that since the adjournment of the last session of the legislative assembly the congress of the United States has submitted to the several state legislatures for ratification a proposed amendment to the right of suffrage to women.

Now therefore, I, S. V. Stewart, as governor of the state of Montana, under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by the constitution and statutes, do hereby convene the Sixteenth legislative assembly in extraordinary session at the city of Helena, the capital of the state of Montana, at the hour of 12 o'clock noon, on Tuesday, the 29th day of July, A. D. 1919, for the purpose of considering the contingencies and emergencies hereinbefore mentioned and, if necessary, for the enactment of laws on the following subjects:

First—To provide proper amendment to the road and highway commission and county commissioners in the building and improvement of roads and highways in Montana.

Second—For the purpose of raising funds for the building and improvement of roads and highways in the state.

Third—To afford such relief as may be possible to the citizens of this state who are suffering on account of the loss of crops by drought.

Fourth—To vote upon the question of the ratification of the proposed amendment to the federal constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

S. V. STEWART, Governor.
