

"THE RE-CONQUEST OF AMERICA" IS REPORTED MOVE TO MAKE WILSON HEAD OF LEAGUE PART OF PLOT?

Besides a Privy Purse of $100,000,000 to Run Private Wars, Campaign of Blandishment of President Is Outlined in Satirical Report to Lloyd George

No document of its kind in years has caused such a stir in Washington as the remarkable pamphlet entitled, "The Reconquest of America," the fourth installment of which is reported by the Bulletin from the New York Call today.

The original pamphlet bears the imprint of A. Gordon Brown and Company, 164 East 37th street, New York city, and the publishers explain that the text, in typewritten form, was found near 500 Madison avenue, that city.

The pamphlet purports to be a report by an anonymous writer to Prime Minister Lloyd George of England.

FOURTH INSTALLMENT.

I confess I am a little uneasy let in the exigencies of diplomatic combat. Mr. Wilson may not have found the joy he anticipated from matching his wits against the best brains of Europe.

The program we arranged for his visit to England (Appendix 33) included a royal reception at Buckingham palace, with which the president was well pleased.

Could Run Own Wars. I would suggest, further, that his powers as president of the league of nations should be left undefined for the present. He may be trusted to assume what power he can, and to use it in the interests of the crown.

Sir John to Review Fleet. His royal highness, the prince, should have a brilliant entourage of our American-born nobility.

During the visit special courtesies should be shown to the presidents and professors whom I have listed in Appendix 23. I would also suggest that a complete program of social favors be arranged for the parsons, editors and newspaper proprietors in Appendix 24 and 25.

Would you, however, kindly give instructions to the publishers of Whitaker's Almanac, and of the official registers, to delete in their next issue, from their lists of British knights, the names of Sir John Biddle, Sir Tasker Bliss, Sir J. D. MacLachlan, Sir Peyton Marz, Sir John Pershing, Sir Hugh Rodman, Sir William Sims, Sir Joseph Strauss, and the other American knights, as their inclusion in the 1919 issue has tended to shake American faith in Mr. Wilson's ingenuity?

Too great attention cannot be given at this time to the presidential peculiarities, for his devotion to our purposes will depend upon our ability to pander to them. I would suggest that the new ambassador to Washington should be chosen only after the most careful thought.

Standing Behind the President. Nevertheless, it would be well quickly to reinforce him in the presidency of the league of nations by staging the first session of the league in Washington. This will convince the sensible people that they are the league and that its power resides in them.

Perhaps you, yourself, might descend to visit this country. Or, if that be impracticable, you might send such noble statesmen and stately noblemen as will suffice to make of the first league session a spectacle of unsurpassed brilliance.

The success of the Joffre, Viviani, Haig, and other missions in amusing the people while the country was quietly put into the league, I would suggest that missions of thanksgiving to America be organized, and that his majesty, the King of the Belgians, Cardinal Mercier, Field Marshal Foch, Venizelos, and an eminent Italian or two, be sent to the front.

8,000 Ministers in Line. While awaiting these diversions for the vulgar we are incessantly in the front lines in the waters of the League.

That the plaintiff and you intermarried at Butte, Montana, on or about the 20th day of September, 1915, and ever since have been and are husband and wife; that for more than one year last past preceding the commencement of this action, plaintiff has been and now is a natural resident of the State of Montana; that for more than one year last past preceding the commencement of this action you have been guilty of willful desertion toward this plaintiff; that you voluntarily separated yourself from his plaintiff with the intent had and maintained by you to desert this plaintiff and ever since have voluntarily lived separate and apart from aid plaintiff with the intent to desert this plaintiff; that you have lived separate and apart from this plaintiff during all of said period of time without the consent of the said plaintiff and against her will; that you, disregarding the solemnity of your marriage vows, have for more than one year last past been guilty of extreme cruelty toward this plaintiff; that as the issue of said marriage there is one child, to-wit, a son, Jack Givens, three years of age; but the said minor child is now in the care and custody of the said plaintiff; that the said plaintiff is the proper person to have the care and custody of said minor child; that you are not a fit and proper person to have the care and custody of said minor child.

LEGAL NOTICES. ALIAS SUMMONS.

In the District Court of the Second Judicial District of the State of Montana and for the County of Silver Bow.

Label Givens, Plaintiff vs John R. Givens, Defendant.

The State of Montana sends greeting to the above named defendant.

You are hereby summoned to answer the complaint in this action, which is filed in the office of the clerk of this court, a copy of which is herewith served upon you, and to file your answer and serve a copy hereof upon the plaintiff's attorney within twenty days after the service of this summons, exclusive of the day of service; and in case of your failure to appear or answer, judgment will be taken against you by default for the relief demanded in the complaint.

A general statement of the facts contained in plaintiff's complaint is as follows:

That the plaintiff and you intermarried at Butte, Montana, on or about the 20th day of September, 1915, and ever since have been and are husband and wife; that for more than one year last past preceding the commencement of this action, plaintiff has been and now is a natural resident of the State of Montana; that for more than one year last past preceding the commencement of this action you have been guilty of willful desertion toward this plaintiff; that you voluntarily separated yourself from his plaintiff with the intent had and maintained by you to desert this plaintiff and ever since have voluntarily lived separate and apart from aid plaintiff with the intent to desert this plaintiff; that you have lived separate and apart from this plaintiff during all of said period of time without the consent of the said plaintiff and against her will; that you, disregarding the solemnity of your marriage vows, have for more than one year last past been guilty of extreme cruelty toward this plaintiff; that as the issue of said marriage there is one child, to-wit, a son, Jack Givens, three years of age; but the said minor child is now in the care and custody of the said plaintiff; that the said plaintiff is the proper person to have the care and custody of said minor child; that you are not a fit and proper person to have the care and custody of said minor child.

Plaintiff prays judgment that the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between you and the plaintiff be dissolved and forever set aside; that the plaintiff be awarded the care, custody and education of the said minor child, and for such other and further relief as a court may seem just and equitable.

LIFE STORY

and as he grew older served mass for Father Eugene Sheehy, the famous glib priest who took such an active part in the Easter week rebellion in Dublin in 1916.

As a boy De Valera was noted as a prodigy in mathematics and as a young man he became instructor in that science at Maynooth. When the Irish people seethed at the cruelty and oppression of 700 years and finally came to the conclusion to fight for their liberties that were denied them, the young professor of mathematics entered heart and soul into the organization of the people and by the fire of his impassioned oratory immediately became a public figure.

Easter Week Commander. During the fighting in Easter week he was one of the commanders under Pearse and Connolly, and, according to the testimony of British officers of the regular English army, displayed military skill of a high order.

It was the raw minute men under the command of De Valera who understood and actually whipped superior numbers of regular English troops supplied with artillery and machine guns and captured numerous British officers and men. De Valera's company of less than 100 held out until ordered to surrender by Commander-in-Chief Pearse, after it became apparent the men could not last.

Following his surrender De Valera was tried with Pearse and Connolly and others of the Irish leaders by courtmartial and, like the others, was sentenced to be shot for treason and rebellion. Because, however, of representations made by American officials of De Valera's American birth, he escaped execution and had his sentence commuted to penal servitude for life, and was sent with the first batch of Irish Volunteers to Dartmoor prison.

Revolts in Prison. Even in prison the dauntless revolutionary spirit of De Valera became evident and he organized a rebellion among the prisoners. The uproar resulted in the British government releasing more than 2,000 of the Irish prisoners held for political crimes, leaving 125 of the more prominent among the Irishmen, including De Valera himself, still in prison.

One fine day De Valera handed an ultimatum to the chief prison warden on behalf of himself and his fellow convicts. They declared they were "prisoners of war" and declared they would no longer obey the prison discipline. The act was mutiny and all were ordered confined to their cells. As a result of the ultimatum the prisoners demolished the windows and furniture in their cells, the noise of the crashing glass sounding, as a contemporary expressed it, "like the thunderbolt of doom."

Following this outbreak the men were transferred to the prisons of Portland, Middlestone and Parkhurst. The prisoners, divided into squads, were taken through the country in chains and upon arrival at their respective prisons continued their revolt.

Protest meetings were being held meanwhile throughout Ireland, and public opinion both there and in this country had been aroused in the extent that following Mr. Haig's return to England from a visit to the United States, the prison gates were thrown open and all Irish prisoners were sent forth, free men.

Sent to Parliament. At the gates of Pentonville prison, where he had been confined last, De Valera was handed the offer of nomination as the Irish republican candidate for parliament from East Clare. He accepted and running on a platform which was composed of the principles contained in the Irish declaration of independence, defeated his reactionary opponent by the unbroken majority of 3 to 1.

Fresh trouble for the British government followed, and, with the realization that Ireland must declare herself in order to present her claims to the world through the peace conference, De Valera called a national convention with representatives from each parish in the island. A provisional revolutionary government, based on the Sinn Fein as a nucleus, was organized, and the republic of Ireland, with De Valera as provisional president, blossomed forth once more.

Since then the newspapers have been full of the sensational exploits of De Valera: How he evaded the British police and military authorities who would again place him in prison and possibly execute him as a rebel, and traveled in disguise back and forth between Ireland and England and the continent, and how, despite the British blockade, he journeyed to the United States and suddenly made himself known in New York.

Sensational Exploits. Many stories have been told of how he evaded the British in his journey to the United States, the most popular and probably the truest one of which being that he impersonated a Canadian army officer and came to Canada on a British transport returning Canadian soldiers, and later made his way over the international border to New York, still in the guise of a Canadian officer.

How he will make his return journey to Ireland remains a question, but no one doubts that the dauntless spirit of the one who has so lately professed of mathematics, now the embodiment of militant revolution, will carry him back to the soil he loves and for which he offered his life.

May Use Airplane. And who knows, but that some day in the future, while British secret service men who continually follow the Irish leader about, are cooling their heels in the belief their quarry is safely in bed in his hotel quarters, he will be in a seaplane, speeding through the night air over the Atlantic, once again having given the brainiest sleuths of the British empire's marine service the slip.
