Siberian Cities Strewn With Dead Women and Children

New York Chemist Tells Piteous Story of the Misery and Famine Raging in Siberia.

By HELEN AUGER, Staff Correspondent for The Federated Press.

New York, Nov. 29.—The story of the Red Cross in Siberia is a story of how the greatest "neutral" organization in the world forgot its neutrality and its traditions of mercy and justice, and took its orders from the American State Department, which in turn was taking its orders from Admiral Kolchak. That, at least, was the conviction gained by Otto W. Lowe, a New York pharmacist, during a year's service as lieutenant in the Red Cross, spent between Irkutsk and Omsk.

"In Irkutsk came my first jar," said Lowe. "I had certain illusions about the role of the Red Cross, and they began to shake when I saw how by a combination of race prejudice and graft and ignorance and plain inefficiency, money and lives were wasted and hundreds of German prisoners made miserable.

"But it was in Omsk that the situation was suddenly dramatized. Just as I arrived the Red Cross was in the act of dismantling a great hospital only then completed, and equipped to wrestle with the terrible scourge of typhus raging there. The Red Cross intended to stay in the thick of the battle with death; was running away with the Kolchak armies. I went to Major Eversoll, commander of the western division of the Red Cross, and asked him what this extraordinary thing meant.

"Orders of the State Department," he answered. Later I learned that Kolchak was behind that order. That he had commanded the town cleared of aid. We took away every yard of gauze and every nurse on a 43-car train, and left the town to die. That was in December, 1919, and the deep snow along our retreat eastward was black with scurrying ridges of refugees fleeing in unreasoning terror from the approach of the Red army. The people who left the towns all along the way were those who believed the stories

THANKSGIVING DAY, 1920. San Francisco.

Editor Bulletin: Today we give thanks for something or other, and I had wondered why such a day was set aside in this United States of the capitalists for people to observe, including, of course, the producing class.

After reading your editorial entitled Hoodwinking the Cornishmen, in your paper of Nov. 22, I have decided that I, for one, have something to be thankful for. I am thankful that I was black-balled by the A. C. M. company because I had the honor to be one of those pickets on the Anaconda road on the day of the "Massacre," better known as "Bloody Wednesday." The thoughts of that shooting still make my blood run cold.

MANUFACTURERS AWAIT RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

(By the Federated Press.) Milwaukee, Nov. 29.—Milwaukee firms will receive orders for $6,000,000 worth of manufactured goods as soon as the United States raises the ban on the importation of Russian gold.

This was the statement made today by E. L. Bobroff, president, Bobroff Foreign Trading company, who recently returned from a prolonged business trip in Russia. He asserted that the Soviet government has deposited $2,000,000 in gold in Reval to apply on $6,000,000 worth of orders which he brought back with him. "Annual business worth 10 times that amount is waiting," he said, "as soon as the ban is lifted. If such an arrangement were made there would be enough business to keep Milwaukee factories going all winter."

When in doubt, look up the Butte Daily Bulletin.
