THE WAR IN VIRGINIA.

McClellan's Army Repulsed. (FROM OUR WEEKLY EDITION OF YESTERDAY.)

LETTER FROM RICHMOND. Special Correspondence of the Appeal.

RICHMOND, May 23, 1862. The Yankees are all around us on the eastern quarter of the city. We hear of them at various points, at distances of five, seven, and ten miles, in greater or less force, committing depredations...

Intelligence having been received that the enemy had retired without doing any damage to the track, the train started and moved uninterrupted to the present terminus at Station 11...

It was supposed all day yesterday that a fight would certainly ensue off before sunset at the Meadow bridge, by which the Central railroad crosses the Chickasaw river from town.

General Johnston's headquarters have been fixed on Church Hill within the corporate limits of Richmond, and no general engagement can be fought without passing the depot for the scene suggesting it to our citizens.

It is not believed, since McClellan has been in the neighborhood of Richmond, that he will attempt to force his way into the city.

Foreign Intervention in American Affairs.

The rumor that France and England proposed to interfere in American affairs continues to excite considerable speculation in the North.

Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, writing on the subject, says: Letters received by the latest steamer from London, and from other sources, have been very interesting...

From the terms of these letters the probable meaning of Count Morny's visit to Richmond is not a matter of doubt.

Count Morny is known to have repeated his visit to Richmond several times, and it is believed that he will be here for some time.
