OXFORD SAVANT STUDIES

ETRUSCAN POTTERY HERE

Professor Beazley Comes to University Museum to Collect Material for Book On Art of Ancients.

In the University of Pennsylvania Museum Prof. J. D. Beazley, of Christ Church College, Oxford, has been studying for more than a week the rare and graceful traceries of ancient Etruscan vases. The University collection is one of the most complete in the world, and naturally attracted Professor Beazley, who is inspecting virtually all collections of any note. He is preparing the first book to be devoted exclusively to the artistic side of Etruscan pottery.

When Rome was an insecure little hill town 2500 years ago, its neighbors north of the Tiber were making the great and little vases which were to form the most beautiful antique treasures possessed in America. A hundred years later wild bands from the mountains ravaged Etruria, and the Roman soldiers of the next generation found the inhabitants easy prey, physically and racially, to their martial dominance. Pottery making, with the extinction of Etruscan individuality, ceased, but in their brief time the Etruscans had made vases such as the world has never made since.

Practically all Etruscan pottery is lively with human figures. These represent, with painstaking accuracy, the daily life of the people, or the events of their history, and it is because archaeologists have been more interested in reading the history of the mysterious pre-Roman period from these cryptic records that the purely artistic side of the study has been more or less neglected. In spite of the difficulties before him, Doctor Beazley is making satisfactory progress with his work, and has already catalogued most of the extant specimens in the world into their rightful schools. A great many of the vases bear the names of their makers, and those which are not signed can usually be assigned to a particular period and culture.

A wine jar, mounted with a trainer and his two fine steers, has especially attracted the English scholar's attention, and he intends to institute a search of all the museums in the world in an endeavor to find its counterpart. The design of the figures is remarkably bold and realistic.

Costly Living Subject for Drama

"The tragedies which result from extravagant living and the demands of selfish women upon men offer material for the hoped-for 'great American drama.'"

The declared Miss Helen Ware, the charming actress, who will appear at the Adelphi Theatre next Monday evening, in a new play by Edward Locke, entitled, "The Revolt."

As there has been so much discussion concerning the great American novel, it is interesting to playwriters, but the public whom this subject concerns.

"The great American play must deal with vital problems, problems that confront every man and woman," continued Miss Ware. "And one of the most intimate of most momentous problems, concerns the outlay for house, and food and dress."

"Americans, as a rule, have a tendency to live beyond their income. They want to maintain a semblance of prosperity, to keep up appearances, make a show. In a measure, this may be due to the fact that our people are optimistic, and, as such, believe that the deficiencies of today will be supplied by the over-abundance provided by tomorrow. But it is shortsighted as it is unwise."

"The cost of the high cost of living, of extravagance, result in tragedies—tragedies of Shakespearean in their suffering and human interest. For the dramatist, seeking to depict life as it is, these modern conditions offer material. A play of this sort would open the closet in which is confined the skeleton of modern domestic life. Such a play should tell the simple story of the tragedy in the lives of those who live for appearance, the gratification of vanity, but whose greatest pleasure is paid for in the end by the greatest sorrow, whose determined purpose, devoted to light living shows a lack of strength of character, and in self-denial. It will be a play in which the female roles will play a dominant part. For in it we will see that men are slaves to women, and that women can, if they will, exercise an influence over men in restraint, temperance, modesty of living, which will not only make them better husbands, but better citizens."

No Death of Doctors From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

ADELPHI—"Help Wanted," comedy drama, bearing a "stop, look and listen" warning to young women venturing into the dangerous world of modern business.

BROAD—"Drugged," by Owen Davis, starring John Mason. Rip-roaring, teeth-on-edge melodrama in evening clothes. Recommended as a sure thriller.

CHESTNUT STREET OPERA HOUSE—"Celine," one of the most spectacular moving-picture dramas ever presented, showing a cataclysmic volcanic eruption, the destruction of a city and the annihilation of the heat at sea.

FORREST—"Ziegfeld Follies." Great fun, eye-catching costumes, gleeful girls.

GARRICK—"Adele." French operetta, roseate romance, siren singing. Georgia Caline as a Parisian enchantress.

WALNUT—"Siberia," thrilling as it was 33 years ago, certain to keep fair damsels from exploring the snowy steppes for romance.

Abounding Amusements in Versatile Auveville

While the autumn productions in serious drama have been as unfruitful as a slow spring, the varieties of amusement in vaudeville have been surprisingly varied and prolific. From New York comes the promise of many new and elaborate plays and musical comedies; it will be several weeks, however, before the more pretentious amusements come along. In the meantime, novel and important attractions are scheduled for the variety houses, the most important at present being the appearance of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, possibly the most celebrated and popular of living dance originators, next week at Keith's. The amusements presented this week offer beguilement for any mood and appeal to every phase of taste.

Broadway

From Hammerstein's New York, where they made a hit, have come the "Famous Golden" troupe, who, in various picturesque costumes, engage in whirling dances, the sort that make you dizzy. Green and Plant perform on the high wire. Steppe, Goodrich and King present a rathskeller act; Chauncey Monroe and company a humorous sketch, and Miles and Moulton various "eccentricities in vaudeville."

Keystone

Musically and merrily "The Boarding School Girls" perform the madcap escapades of exuberant youth. Rosalind and May La Follette are pleasing in a dancing act. Warring and Manning, in comic songs, and the acrobatic Wally Trio are among a well-variegated and entertaining list.

Colonial

Supposing you were about to be married and all your former sweethearts appeared to you in a dream, just how one youth has confronted this situation is amusingly depicted by Eldon in a funny act, "His Awful Dream," with Bessie Clifton impersonating the ladies of the past.

Globe

Sweet is the music that comes from the unseen, and mysterious and magical are the strains of the invisible hand directed by Edna Lowell. Aside from the scenic effects of this act there is a bill of well-assorted amusements, including the well-known song writer, Will Morrissey, and the original "movie girl," Nellie Hackett, in a program of songs; Tom Gillen, with a fund of Irish tales, and Anthony and Mack, in a singing and talking skit, "The Italian and the Boss."
