THE DRAMA

ANTOINETTE WALKER

In "Nearly Married" at the Garrick.

FLASHES FROM "STARS"

Sir James M. Barrie, the English novelist and playwright, will spend a month in America, and will visit many cities. This is not, as has been stated, Sir James' first visit to America, but his second. He first came to America in 1896. One night in September of that year he went to the Empire Theatre, where Maude Adams was acting "Rosemary" with John Drew. The next morning he visited Charles Frohman, to whom he said:

"If you will let me have Miss Adams' services I will write a play for her within a year."

And he wrote "The Little Minister."

"As to the war," said Barrie, "I believe America as a whole feels what England feels—that this is a necessary war against militarism. Every country has been arming, and loaded guns always go off sooner or later. The issue involved is as clear-cut as the cause which brought it about—whether soldiers or citizens are to rule Europe."

"But there is one distinction that should be made in stating the causes for war; namely, that the Kaiser is entirely to blame. This is less than fair. The Kaiser was a young man in 1870, when the war spirit seized Germany. The Kaiser is the product not the cause of Germany's militaristic system. There can be no peace, and no end to the present war, unless one side is thoroughly beaten."

A. H. Woods has put Willard Mack's play, "Kick In," into rehearsal with a cast that includes John Barrymore, Jane Grey, Forrest Winstan, Annie Mack Berlin and Elita Proctor Otis. Marjorie Rameau, in private life Mrs. Mack, was to have played the leading feminine role, but she has given it up and has been succeeded by Miss Grey. Byron Ongley is staging the play.

Frank Wilstach was for many years the scholarly and splendid advance agent for Solberg and Marlowe. Mr. Wilstach is now press agent for "The Follies of 1914." The advantages of heralding such a show are humorously described by Mr. Wilstach:

"I rejoice that I have escaped from the thrall of Shakespeare; that I am now 'carrying the colors' for 'The Passing Show of 1914.' With a Bard of Avon troupe there was no chance for language, and so one had to be as serious as taxes, solemn as a King on a five-france piece, or stupid as a hound chasing an iron deer. Now, all is unrestrained."

"When discussing Shakespeare you can't very well refer to him as the bithessome, bubbling bard, or as the whirling wizard of words, but ah! how easy and how nice it is when you have to write about a musical extravaganza. Theatrical language is grand. Richard LaGalliene talks a whole lot about 'beautiful words,' but give me alliterations and adjectives and jaw-breakers."

"If one cannot have the use of all the figures of speech, how can one achieve the fluidity and flexibility of expression that will excite attention, pique interest and accelerate curiosity? Let me write the adjectives in advance and I don't care who pens the criticisms."

"Language without adjectives would be like a soup house without soup, rivers without fish, a forest without trees, or the air without birds. Life without adjectives, trees, birds and soup would be unbearable."

It is said that many actors are not good judges of what they can do. Nat Goodwin, one of America's most brilliant comedians, wanted, for instance, to play Shylock. And after he had played it he met a friend.

"Did you see me as Shylock the other evening?" asked Mr. Goodwin.

"I was there," the friend replied, "but I couldn't see you as Shylock."

So it is. The comedian yearns for tragedy. The tragedian believes he would win fame and fortune as a comedian.

Madame Nastimova, who returned to this country last week to begin rehearsals in a play written by B. MacDonald Hastings, had much to say about the war and its results in a sort of rennaissance of art.

"Out of this great strife a new order of things is to come," she declared. "There will be new forms of government and the greatest freedom of thought. Since progress was possible under the old system, think of the progress that will be possible under the new."

THEATRICAL BAEDERER

ACADEMY OF MUSIC—"Cabrila," moving-picture drama, by Gabrielle d'Annunzio, of the third century B. C.

ADELPHI—"The Truth," revival of Clyde Fitch's comedy, with Grace George in the title role. Miss George has hardly ever done anything better. An example of what a careful manager can do with an excellent play.

BROAD—"Lady Windermere's Fan," an excellent presentation of Oscar Wilde's delightful satire by Margaret Anglin.

CHESTNUT STREET OPERA HOUSE—"Pilate's Daughter," miracle play, by Francis L. Kenzel. "Replete with amazing spectacular effects."

FORREST—"Chin-Chin," musical fantasy, with music by Ivan Caryll. To see Fred Stone as a lady barabac rider is a joy to be remembered forever.

GARRICK—"Nearly Married," farce-comedy, by Edward Selwyn, starring Bruce McRae. Bright, amusing.

LYRIC—"Passing Show of 1914," third annual revue from the New York Winter Garden, with George Monroes and Harry Fisher as chief funmakers. A reeling riot of resplendent revelry.

WALNUT—"The Round Up," return of the drama of wild western life, with Shep Camp as "Slim" Hoover, the immortal fat man. Thrilling and well acted.

When there is greater humanity there will be greater art.

"This brings me to an ambition of my own which has lain very near to my heart all these years. While I am an American in spirit, I have long wished to be an international actress—to play in English in England, in France in French, in Germany in German and in Russia in Russian. Under the new art I would gladly be an international actress expressing myself in artistic media as fundamental and as easily understood as the physical facts of all existence."

According to Georgia O'p, who plays an important role in "Too Many Cooks," an early attraction at the Adelphi, ambition is a menace if the aspirant worries about it. "Anything that worries a person is abnormal and all wrong; naturally you will agree that abnormal ambition is not a good thing," Miss O'p says. "Therefore, don't go too strong."

"The Things That Count," William A. Brady's romantic play, which ran an entire season in New York last year, will open a brief engagement at the Adelphi Theatre November 16.

This will be a season of farces, and among the more triumphant of plays of this sort to be seen here this season will be "A Pair of Sixes" and "The Third Party," both of which are announced as early attractions at the Adelphi Theatre.

"Miss Daisy," the novel musical play by Philip Bartholomae, which is just now scoring a complete triumph in New York, will be presented at the Lyric Theatre here later in the current season.

Behrens Opera Club

Under the capable direction of Dr. Thaddeus Rich, the Behrens Opera Club has made splendid progress in its rehearsals for the performance of Flotow's "Martha" at the Academy of Music on the evening of Tuesday, October 20.
