HAZEL DAWN BEGUILLES IN HERBERT OPERETTA

Celebrated Composer Scores Another Success in "The Debutante"—Book Thin of Plot, But Production Lavishly Clothed and Excellently Cast.

Victor Herbert's music is most remarkable, perhaps, for its orchestration. Technically it is marvellously composed and orchestrated with the felicitous skill of the master genius. Herbert's waltzes are always incomparable, haunting, hypnotizing, with a magically melodic quality; his songs are often dreams. Herbert is, too, a musician with a sense of humor.

Luxuriously staged, with scenic settings pendulous with mammoth roses, with a chorus of stunning, almost Parisian-looking girls, gowned with ornate magnificence, replete with effective dances, waltzes and songs, and with Hazel Dawn, just roseately lovely, as star, Mr. Herbert's new operetta, "The Debutante," opened last night at the Garrick Theatre.

Inconsequential as to plot, the book, written by those uninspired and becoming-wearisome librettists, the Smith Brothers—Harry B. and Robert B., not yet incorporated—seems merely to string together a series of incidents and situations and to give the principals the cues for singing and dancing to the music.

There take part in "The Debutante" Elaine, the daughter of Sir Francis Vane, charmingly interpreted by Hazel Dawn; Godfrey Fraser, the stock humorous American captain of industry, laughably enacted by William Danforth; Philip, his son, in love with Elaine, supposedly a bounding American youth, rather too English, yach know, by Alan Mudge; Maria Zanolis, an English suffragette, and her husband Ezra, composer of cubist grand opera. Maude Odell, as the vigorous suffragette, proves a corking character actress, and Will West, as her husband, puts across the greatest amount of fun in the piece.

Miss Dawn acts her part as ingenuously, as unaffectedly, as naturally as when she played "The Pink Lady." While Miss Dawn lacks all that artifice which becomes art, she is all the more insidiously captivating therefor. She is a sublimely beautiful, rosy, golden-haired Elaine, and her rose-colored gown is simply gorgeous. Alan Mudge, as the young American, might make a more convincing hero if he learned the art of make-up and appeared with at least the simulation of such good looks as capture women's hearts.

Of the many delightful songs in the show, Miss Dawn scored hits with "Professor Cupid," "The Love of Lorell," in which Robert G. Pitkin—a ripping lieutenant of the navy—and Mr. Mudge joined, and "Call Around Again." Sylvia Jason, Mr. Pitkin and Mr. Mudge evoked the greatest number of scores with "The Baker's Boy and the Chimney Sweep," a catchy song, excellently accompanied by a novel dance. Mr. Herbert's musical humor reached its high apex in "The Cubist Opera," a screaming farce sung by Will West and William Danforth. "Grand opera," declared Will West, "is tragedy set to music. The music is all on the stage—the tragedy is in the boxoffice."

"S'HARI"

A Linguistic Treat at the Forrest With an Odd and Delightful Prima Donna

Whether you dance it or see it or just try to pronounce it, the "S'hari" is a vastly satisfactory affair. And so is all of the new operetta at the Forrest. But before you can show your real feelings about it you need a lesson in pronunciation. For "Sari" is "S'hari" and a great many other names are as linguistically twisted. As for the whole entertainment, you may safely pronounce it a hit. Sari herself had temperament, the temperament of a Gatling gun. So she hoisted her jealous old father and her jealous old brother, and the girl they were both in love with, and even the gypsy music which they likewise fought over. Naturally enough, she objected to the old man's expedition to Paris to play for the King of Basilia, and so she hid her sorrow over his failure and the son's triumph in music and love with the prospect of getting dad safe back in gypsyland. And also with an engaging young Count that she picked up on the way.

All of which shows that there is just about as much of the Merry Widow-Prince Danilo stuff in "Sari" as there is of tango. It has no Maxims and no imitation Vernon Castles. Instead of clowning, it supplies humor made out of human beings and their dispositions. There is even a little pathos in it.

Add music, lovely, bewitching, toe-catching, lip-puckering music, music with the proper touch of Hungarian rhythm, the warmth of Vienna, quite a little humorous by-play, and a rich, full orchestration that makes the best of our operettas look like Broadway song-smiths. Mr. Kaimann's contribution—plus an exceptional orchestra—makes a large share of "Sari's" attractiveness.

But never forget Miss Hajos. After all, she is the unique fact in the entertainment at the Forrest. There is even a good "book" and better music. There is even an excellent supporting company. But the little woman who plays and dances and sings Sari into an amusing and original character—Sari, who was only a side-light in the original Viennese libretto—is the noteworthy element. She has a voice—which is not unusual in young Europeans—She can dance—like all Americans. But, most of all, she can be funny. She can invent character.
