

THE ADVENTURE OF TARZAN

By EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS

AUTHOR OF "TARZAN OF THE APES"

Copyright, 1915, by A. C. McClurg & Co.

SYNOPSIS:

Tarzan, after he has given up Jane Porter, returns to Europe. On his way back to Paris he meets a certain Count and Countess de Coude, and as a result the Countess becomes his friend. He meets a certain Countess de Coude, and as a result the Countess becomes his friend. He meets a certain Countess de Coude, and as a result the Countess becomes his friend.

CHAPTER XIV. BACK TO THE PRIMITIVE.

AS TARZAN struck the water, his first impulse was to swim clear of the ship and possible danger from her propellers. He knew whom to thank for his present predicament, and as he lay in the sea, just supporting himself by a gentle movement of his hands, his chief emotion was one of chagrin that he had been so easily bested by Rokoff.

CHAPTER XV. CLOSE TO THE CABIN THE JUNGLE COMMENCED.

Close to the cabin the jungle commenced, and into it Tarzan of the Apes plunged, wary and noiseless—once more savage beast hunting its food. For a time he kept to the ground, but, finally, discovering no spur indicative of nearby meat, he took to the trees. With the first dizzy swing from tree to tree all the old joy of living swept over him.

CHAPTER XVI. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XVII. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XVIII. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XIX. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XX. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXI. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXII. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXIII. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXIV. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXV. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXVI. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXVII. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXVIII. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXIX. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXX. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXXI. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXXII. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXXIII. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXXIV. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXXV. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXXVI. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXXVII. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXXVIII. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XXXIX. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

CHAPTER XL. THE APE-MAN TRAVELED SWIFTLY THROUGH THE FOREST.

The ape-man traveled swiftly through the forest, and about noon came to the site of the village, but to his disappointment he found the jungle had overgrown the plantain fields and that the thatched huts had fallen in decay.

skin of his artificial civilization, and with heavy and cold opinions the old sleep of the wild beast that had fed to reptile. Yet a woman's "yes" would have bound him to that other life forever, and made his thought of this savage existence repulsive.

Tarzan slept late into the following forenoon, for he had been very tired from the labor and exertion of the long night and day upon the ocean, and the jungle faint that had brought into play muscles that he had scarce used for nearly two years. When he awoke he ran to the plunge first to drink. Then he took a plunge into the sea, swimming about for a quarter of an hour. Afterward he returned to his cabin, and breakfasted of the flesh of Horta. This done, he buried the bones of the carcass in the soft earth outside the cabin for his evening meal.

Once more he took his rope and vanished into the jungle. This time he hunted nobly—man, although had you asked him he would have taken care of that, and in the meantime it must be made to procure food for him. He called it carefully, and throwing it about his shoulder, went out, closing the door behind him.

Close to the cabin the jungle commenced, and into it Tarzan of the Apes plunged, wary and noiseless—once more savage beast hunting its food. For a time he kept to the ground, but, finally, discovering no spur indicative of nearby meat, he took to the trees. With the first dizzy swing from tree to tree all the old joy of living swept over him.

Death has claimed one of the oldest paper manufacturers in this city and one of the leading officials of the Lutheran Church in the country, in the person of John K. Shryock. The aged manufacturer and churchman died yesterday at his home, 144 North Bouvier street, at the age of 89 years.

Several hundred persons were afforded a mild sensation at the Zoo yesterday by the spectacle of a well-dressed woman beating frantically against the case containing the boa constrictors and crying "Oh, Snare—er! My Gladys."

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

She was playing in Globe, Arizona," she said, "when a Mexican stole my snake Gladys. Since then I have not seen it. It was chance that led me to come here on my way to New York. She demanded the return of the reptile in most strenuous terms, according to Superintendent Carson, but he refused to give it up.

Mr. Carson said the boa constrictor had been presented to the Zoo by a traveling salesman who had a fondness for such creatures.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.

When Snare's finally persuaded her to leave the building and took her to the Superintendent's office, it developed that she was Daisy De Mara, of the "Trotters of Tomorrow" company, which recently disbanded in San Francisco, and that the reptile had been a feature of her act.