

NANCY WYNNE HAS A WORD TO SAY ON SOCIAL DOINGS HERE AND THERE

Daughter of Judge and Mrs. William Wilkins Carr Will Be Formally Introduced This Afternoon at the Ritz-Carlton, Together With Her Cousin, Miss Robinson

HELENE MARTIN and her cousin, Catherine Robinson, will be introduced to the gay world this afternoon at a large d'ansant at the Ritz-Carlton. The two girls are very intimate and have had several parties together and then Catherine's family are in mourning, so could not present her formally themselves as was at first intended. Both of them have been away at boarding school, Helene at St. Mary's on the Hudson, and Catherine in the few months before the war. But in the few months of going out they have made many friends and are very much liked.

The girls who will receive this afternoon will be Christine Stockton, Martha McAllister, Sarah Penrose, Josephine Foster, Elizabeth Wheeler, Margaret Perot, Marie Wright, Sarah and Margaret Myers, Sarah Franklin, Margaret Remak, Marjory Taylor, Eleanor Pepper, Mazie Graham, Barbara Benson, Uytendale Baird, Edith Dallas, Rosamonde Fisher, Anne Merrick, Emilie Kennedy, Elizabeth Adams, Theodora Lillie, Valentine Mitchell, Susie Ingersoll, Frances Robinson, Kate Jayne, Frances Tyson, Carlisle Robinson, Marjorie Morris, Anna Brinton and Eleanor Johnstone, of Washington.

Receiving with Mrs. Carr will be Judge Carr's sister, Mrs. James Marion Johnsons. Mrs. Charles Platt, Jr., Mrs. Arthur Biddle, Mrs. Aleck Van Rensselaer, Mrs. Hobart Brown and Mrs. Norton Downs. Most of the girls will go out to the Lillie dance in Haverford at the Merion Cricket Club after the tea. The dance is given for Theodora and Edith Earle, who are such great friends. It is bound to be a success, for the Lillies certainly know how to entertain. The boys and girls all say they have a perfect time at everything they give.

Almost before we had time to get over the surprise of their engagement, Katharine and Roddy Page were married. The engagement was a surprise, because people had not known of Roddy's attention; they had kept the secret so well. It was announced at Edwina Wetherill's wedding in October, and they decided to be married in December, which, after all, is a good thing, for long engagements, as a rule, are not to be encouraged. They are apt to become rather wearying. So they were married on Saturday at Holy Trinity, and I seldom have seen a handsomer bride party or prettier wedding. Even the ushers were very good looking—new thinkers of that 12 good to look at!

And the poor dears were awfully self-conscious, smiling as they came down the aisle. I should think Saunders Meade would dream of weddings, he has been an usher at so many lately. Perhaps he will be a principal soon, and is only practicing for a while. You can't tell, and, of course, the web bird may have exaggerated.

The bridesmaids and I should say matrons, for every one but Cecile Howell, Sue Bruce and Charlotte Bain was a matron, were simply beautiful, the unmarried ones sharing in that appellation as well.

It was good to see Marie Louise Munn home again. She is so pretty and graceful, and Edwina Wetherill, another recent bride, was very stunning.

A noon wedding is always attractive, though sometimes the guests do find it hard to get there. One poor soul was bewailing her fate. "We have the most hectic time in the mornings, you know; the nurse has the chamberwork to do, so I have to be with the children, and, of course, they are into everything, and then the dog is sure to come in and eat everything up." It was all clear to me except about the dog. Why not keep him out in the yard, or better still, give him some breakfast of his own. But it is hard to decide for others.

The wedding festivities were continued at the Ritz-Carlton, where all the eddies were made to the departing bride and groom, and a thoroughly enjoyable party it was, too—one of those delightfully impromptu affairs into which every one plunged with interest. The main ballroom was requisitioned for the occasion, and about 50 of the guests, including all the bridal attendants, spent the remainder of the afternoon dancing and teasing until long after the dinner hour. Fisher Wright was one of the gayest in the party, and for an hour or so he was seen at the piano, playing all the newest waltzes and fox-trots until the Ritz orchestra appeared. The stunning pink-striped frocks of the bridesmaids and their charming tulle hats made the prettiest picture imaginable. Mrs. Gurnee Munn changed her frock for the smartest tailored costume, which gave evidences of her recent visit to Scotland, in that it had cuffs and pockets of a decided plaid. She carried about with her a miniature "Michael," which has so delighted the lovers of Peg o' My Heart. Sumner Rulon Miller and Nedy Page were dancing about everywhere, anxious to see everybody happy and unquestionably succeeding. Phyllis Yarrow arrived in a stunning blue-cloth costume and small, gray velvet turban. The John Dixons, Edwina Wetherill, Sue Bruce, Billy Rowland and the Voorhees men were a few of the merry-makers, and when I left the number of guests was increasing gradually.

Mrs. J. Hutchinson Scott's supper club at the Bellevue-Stratford was a glorious success on Saturday night, and Mrs. Scott, who appeared for the first time since her little son's illness, was welcomed by many members and their guests.

The Jack Masons, who entertained at the theatre for Agnes Brockie, took the whole party of 42 guests to the supper afterward. Then the John C. Robinsons had ten guests and the Evans Robinsons six. As an echo of the all-day festivities of the Page-Kremer wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Rodman Page entertained a party of ten. The Eddy Dales also entertained, and so did Harry Adams and Armit Brown. Others who entertained were Lewis Parsons, Mrs. Isaac Schleicher, Jr.; Daniel Wentz, Walter Foulke, Harrison Caner, Dr. and Mrs. Dillard, Mrs. Thomas Elwyn, Marion Dougherty, Charles Potter, Jr.; Clark Thompson, Spencer Miller, 3d; Daniel Hutchinson, Sam Henderson, Lou Wister, William Wiedersheim, Churchill Williams, Sydney Brock, Judge Audenried, Cecil Fitter, Horace Allen, Sam Hubn, Braden Kyle and Richard Norton.

Millady's Gowns

Now that the opera season is in full swing and the debutantes have made their first formal bow to society, all feminine eyes are turned toward the frocks and trills which are being sponsored by those individual members of the world of society who do not hesitate to adopt fashion's innovations. A cursory glance into the Ritz during the luncheon hour will afford an excellent opportunity to witness an interpretation of fashion's decrees, and by the same token, a stroll along the foyer of the Metropolitan during the intermission will reveal an array of modes that would cause the most ardent altruist a pang of envy. Undoubtedly this is an age of luxury in dress; never before have such luxurious textures been resorted to to serve the purpose of fashion, unless we allow our mind's eye to wander back to the habiliments of the luxury-loving Dukes of Venice. In this respect the Parisian couturiers have foretold us, and it is due to the aims and ideals of Fortuny, the grandson of the noted painter, that the renaissance of bygone fashions is with us.

Exquisitely hand-painted chiffons, old world brocades and the most alluring uses of silver and gold equip the woman of unlimited income who seeks the latest word in smartness. One of the most fascinating of Fortuny's selections has been adopted by Mrs. Robert Kelso Cassatt, who gives an indelible cachet to all that she wears. This particular creation of flowered brocade faintly threaded in silver was of the fashionable ankle length. The corsage was of Grecian influence, a fantasy of white and silver, girded with silver bands and absolutely innocent of sleeves. The single note of brilliancy was attained in the circle of coral cross-grain ribbon, which was seen at intervals under a wide band of applique lace. A charming accompaniment was the wrap of satin which hung in the most luxurious folds to the ankles.

Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury has also succumbed to the lure of gold brocade, and her daughter, Mrs. Walter H. Brooks, Jr., has chosen costumes of that material for the winter's social functions.
