

SPEAKING THE PUBLIC MIND

Letters From Readers on Various Timely Topics of Local and General Interest—Tariff and Politics. A Square Deal for Fire Horses

WHAT TO DO WITH FIRE HORSES

To the Editor of Evening Ledger: The purchase of the old fire horse "Joe," in order to save him from the degradation of being made to haul garbage, tends to bring that portion of the municipal government, which has charge of such animals into unenviable notoriety.

When I became known that "Joe" was suffering from a "side bone," a private individual upon hearing of this, actuated by the sense of justice and humanity, rescued the overworked animal from further suffering.

We are scarcely hope to awaken any feeling of interest or sympathy in a body of men who have never made an effort to care for their faithful servants worth out in the service of saving life and property.

It is not true that labor alone will avail the boys who, in the past, have been the recipients of such jewels. Fancy, if you can, the distress of such a soul crushed by a prohibition against the right to labor.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS

To the Editor of Evening Ledger: I am writing because I want to express my approval of your very suggestive "cartoon" in Saturday's Evening Ledger. You certainly "hit the nail on the head" in that picture, and I earnestly hope that many parents will be persuaded thereby to refrain from encouraging in their children the military spirit which is certainly so far removed from the spirit of Christmas.

Believing as I do that world-peace is possible only after the education of the masses by the dealer for international brotherhood, I have thought to encourage conversation and personal testimony to these principles.

DOLLARS IN THE POCKET

To the Editor of Evening Ledger: Sir—Just now, when hearts are full of love and pocketbooks wide open, I wish to recall a quotation by the late Judge Harry Davis. "The saving of a boy is not only the saving of his immortal soul, but dollars in the pockets of our taxpayers." For more than 15 years it has been my privilege as well as duty to look after the boys of our streets, chiefly those of the wayward sort.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

And just think, our cruel child labor laws will effectively prevent the development of another Frederick Parry Morris.

DO YOU, SIR, RAISE CHICKENS? IF YOU DO, STOP AND LISTEN

Question Addressed to Every Visitor of Poultry Show, Whether He Don a Prince Albert or Not

2000 BIRDS ON EXHIBITION

Was the most stylish clothes made by the most fashionable Walnut street tailor and the chances are that you will be taken for a farmer just the same at the poultry show in the Metropolitan Building.

"Do you raise chickens, my friend?" you will hear addressed to you many times, no matter how metropolitan your garb may be. The phrase is almost as persistent as the cackle of the hens and the crow of the rooster.

No longer can they distinguish the farmer from the man described in the comics as "citizens" by his clothes. This is the day of a new farmer, whom the man who tills the soil, raises chickens and breeds cattle no longer wears a wisp of straw in his hair, a chin beard on a mustacheless face, and a side flapping hat that formed the frame for the picture the cartoonist of yesterday used to draw.

Every time there is a poultry show or an exhibit of farm products or a lecture on agricultural products, it becomes more and more noticeable that the old farmer with the baggy trousers, cap and bag and cotton underclothes, is passing away. The new farmer is the college graduate, the scientist, the capitalist. For the most part he is sleek and well groomed. He is a man of culture, applying knowledge which he has worked hard to acquire, he is directing the operation of a large investment of money, just as the banker or business man does. For farming these days requires capital to pay for modern machinery and the automobiles, which are fast supplanting horses and mules on the up-to-date agricultural enterprise.

If you are the best-dressed man, therefore, in metropolitan society, you may hear the question, "Do you raise chickens, my friend?" addressed straight at you.

Scores of men are asking this question. It seems as if some slogan were being passed among the visitors to the show. You can't escape it.

The words are the prelude to a speech. If you answer in the affirmative you will be uttering an "open sesame" to an enthusiastic description of something that is for sale and which, if you buy it, will enable you to double the product of your poultry farm or perhaps triple it, or even well, no, they really go no higher than that.

Chickens are by no means the only attraction at the show. There are any number of exhibits displaying any number of things. Every ten steps you bump into a representative of some farm journal or poultry paper who offers you a copy free and asks you to become a subscriber to his valuable paper. The latest and most approved mechanical apparatus for the raising of chickens are on show, sent C. D., subject to approval. A dozen varieties of chicken houses are displayed, quite attractively built and seeming good enough for humans and positively palatial for a chicken.

Now this statement is correct respecting Washington, as every schoolboy knows the first President of the United States died in the month of December, 1799. But, quoting from Scott's "Life of Napoleon Bonaparte," we have the following:

"The fifth of May came amid wind and rain. Napoleon's departing spirit was engaged in strife more terrible than that of the elements around. The words tete d'armee (head of the army), the last that escaped his lips, showed that his mind was watching the progress of a heady Napoleon slung in the air, and, after a struggle that showed the original strength of his constitution, Napoleon expired."

According to the eminent historian, Napoleon died on May 1821. So, in view of the fact so stated, we think your correspondent in error when he says that December 11 is the anniversary of the great Emperor's death.
