STRANGER FROM OKLAHOMA DEFEATS BENNY KAUFMAN IN HARD BOUT AT OLYMPIA

Nathan Jackson Is Surprise of the Evening. Johnny Dundee Beats Buck Fleming

By ROBERT W. MAXWELL

A STRANGER wandered into the Olympia A. A. last night, donned a pair of boxing gloves, climbed into the ring and set down in a corner. A couple of seconds hovered near him and made a feeble effort to carry on a conversation. They were the only ones in the vast arena who paid any attention to the visitor. The customer were busy talking among themselves and could not be bothered by some one they didn't know and didn't care to know.

R. W. MAXWELL

Suddenly there was a cheer, and a sturdy, black-headed figure walked down the aisle. He climbed through the ropes alongside the stranger who was huddled in his corner, put a hand on the stranger's knee for assistance and, utterly ignoring those who walked to the opposite side, bowing to the applause. Referee Frank O'Brien then put in an appearance, held up his hand and made the following announcement:

Takes Reddy's Place "Gentlemen, Battlin' Redding, who was to meet Benny Kaufman, is awful sick with typhoid or pneumonia or smallpox or something. He ain't in no shape to box tonight. Here the well-known arbiter paused, walked over to the stranger and whispered in his ear—"an, gemmen," he continued, "Nathan Jackson, from Oklahoma, who weighs 120 pounds, will take Battlin' Reddy's place."

The substitute smiled, looked around, and gazed into a flock of scowls at the ringside. Stony silence greeted the announcement. The spectators did not take kindly to this boy without a reputation who had DARED to take a chance against the respectable Benny Kaufman. They gave him a brief "once over" and settled back in their seats to endure an uninteresting slaughter. Few ever thought the visitor would remain with us very long, so they decided to make the best of it.

Mr. Jackson Surprises But there was a different story when the battle began. The stranger proved to be a regular bearcat, and soon Benny was traveling on the rocky road to a public house. Jackson handed out an assortment of jabs and hooks that made Mr. Kaufman blink with surprise, and Adam Ryan, who arrived just before the battle began, was rendered almost speechless.

"Whacha waitin' fer?" he gasped at Benny. "Cummon an' do somethin'!" Benny didn't know, and when he tried to inflict terrible punishment on Jackson he was driven back by a shower of lefts to the face and healthy punches to the body. This continued for six rounds, and at the end the same customer and spectators who filled to give the stranger a second look stood up in their seats and greeted the greatest creation ever tendered a boxer at the Olympia. He was a bum when he came in, but in 18 minutes his social standing had changed to that of a hero.

Nathan was introduced as a native of Oklahoma. The name of the town was not given, but it probably was one which was destroyed by a cyclone recently. And judging from the speed displayed, Nathan was able to outrun a couple of those windstorms when he escaped to the East.

Deserved the Verdict Jackson was the surprise of the evening, and he deserved the winner's end when the bout was finished. He was trying hard all of the time, and displayed ability which marks him as one of the coming bantams or featherweights.

Tommy Carey, another substitute, also made a good impression, although he was injured so severely in the fourth round that Referee O'Brien stopped the bout. He substituted for Tommy O'Keefe, who was ill, and clashed with Micky Donley, that hard-hitting lightweight from Newark, N. J. Carey took all kinds of punishment, but never backed up and kept going in for more. He seemed reluctant to quit, and did so only after Doctor O'Connor discovered that his lip was badly cut.

Young Johnny Dundee tried hard to emulate his illustrious namesake in the second bout and his stuff went great. He met Johnny Dalley, billed as an amateur champion, and put the champ to sleep in the fourth round. In the curtain raiser Frankie Clark stomped Jimmy McElroy in the second session.

Oh, Yes, the Windup There was a windup. Buck Fleming, Herman Hindin's pride and joy, battled with the real Johnny Dundee, and although he made a good showing and gave the Wop one of the hardest battles he has had in this city, Dundee deserved the verdict.

BRADLEY AND DONLEY MEET IN RYAN WINDUP

Barney Ford Opens Model A. C. With Campi and F. Moore in Star Bout

With the opening of the Model A. C. tonight, local fans have the choice of two boxing shows. Followers of Pat Bradley will witness their old tackle a rugged lad in the windup at the Ryan A. C. when he answers the bell against Mickey Donley, who defeated Tommy Carey in four rounds at the Olympia last night. Although Bradley has a hard proposition on his hands, Donley also may find rough sailing, as Pat's body smashes are vicious enough to weaken any boxer.

Barney Ford, who breaks into the local fold as a matchmaker and promoter, has Johnny Campi and Frankie Moore booked for the final at the Model A. Neither boy has any science, but they more than make up for this deficiency by aggressiveness and toughness. Another feature on the opening program will be an exhibition of prize-winning boxing by the "world's champion," Eddie Mack, and his manager, "Babe" D'Hourke.

Tonight's program follows: First bout—Frankie Conway vs. Mickey Moore. Second bout—Charley Daggett vs. Jimmy Valentin. Third bout—Bobby Driscoll vs. Terry Keitchell. Fourth bout—Eddie Cavanaugh vs. Joe Bradshaw. Windup—Mickey Donley vs. Pat Bradley.

Charley Thomas, the former, may be matched to meet Jack Brazzo at a local club.

Two South Philadelphia matches hanging for Pat Bradley vs. Darby Casper and Al Nelson vs. Al Neat.

Joe Devir, manager of Jack Carroll, has matched the corner sailor with Joe-Slav Kelly at the Gaiety Theatre, Wednesday night, May 24.

The star bout at the Olympia next week will be between Lew Truller and Al Shubert.

Billy Gibson writes from New York that Fred Webb has turned down a $2,000 offer to meet Benny Leonard in Buenos Aires.

Johnny Kilbane and Eddie Wallace will clash in a 10-round bout at Montreal, Can., tomorrow night. The latter is set for a $100 guarantee.

Jim Flynn has not retired—yet. He is matched with Jack Dillon for 10 rounds at Dewey, Okla., July 4.

Two "dream" bouts scheduled here are Benny Leonard vs. George Chaney and Benny Leonard vs. George White. Promoters here know nothing about these matches, although exchange states the bouts will be held in Philadelphia.

Morris Wolf, the Chicago lad who has had but four bouts, looks like one of the most promising prospects in this city. Morris is a cool fellow in the ring and possesses a punch that spells sleep.

CENTRAL HIGH IN LINE FOR TRACK AND FIELD TITLE

Northeast Virtually Sure of Baseball Honors—C. H. S. Players Ineligible

OTHER SCHOOL NEWS

Central High's showing in the dual track meets and the big title competitions held to date points to a Crimson and Gold victory in the high school championships, for unless the unexpected happens another victory will go to Broad and Green streets.

Central's hopes of winning the Inter-scholastic League baseball championship have gone sky high. The loss of seven regulars among others the veteran Zolner, who was hurt in a recent league contest, has shattered the championship hopes of the Central players. The team has been ripped apart by faculty disqualifications and injuries.

Northeast High looms up as the likely pennant winners. Catholic High, West Philadelphia and Central High will probably fight it out for the second position. Catholic High's victory over South Philadelphia yesterday was clean-cut and decisive.

Robinson was the individual star when Catholic High trimmed Southern. His record of three runs, two hits, three stolen bases and a great catch after a long run against the wind proved that he is one of the best scholastic players in the league.

That Penn Charter has future tennis stars in the making was evident yesterday when the Quakers' second-string players defeated the Philadelphia Trades School team in a match, 5 to 0. We must at least give Trades School credit for trying. It marks the first appearance of the Trades' net players in a match with one of the league teams.

Northeast High School's freshmen won considerable glory in the meet with Germantown High's first-year students yesterday afternoon. Comfort, Schofield, Maltack, Goldman, Graham and Thomas were the leading point winners for the Red and Black. Bircher, Brooks, DeLong and Stoker were the best performers for Germantown High.

Penn Charter, Episcopal Academy, Friends' Central and Germantown Academy all have athletes in training for the annual Inter-academic League track and field championship meet, to be held at Franklin Field next Friday afternoon. Penn Charter, having won the tennis title, the Inter-academic League baseball title, is looking forward to a triple win by also capturing the track and field championship.

SENSATIONAL SPURT MADE BY CLEVELAND DUE TO HARD, CONSISTENT BALL PLAYING

By GRANTLAND RICE

STANDING with reluctant feet where the fans and queries meet, there at least are two fanatic queries you can bank on.

No matter what other questions may pop from the nimble brain of the fan, these two rule the order of the day: 1. In this Cleveland affair just a flash, or can Phil's club hang out? 2. How do you account for the big reversal the Giants have shown?

The Cleveland Miracle Most of the rival American League managers with whom we have talked don't believe that Cleveland will ever win a pennant or finish 1-2-3. But last season we could find no National League manager, except Moran, who thought the Phillies would finish 1-2-3.

We had no idea that Cleveland would ever jump from seventh place last year to first place this May. In the same way we have no idea where Cleveland will finish. But if two things happen, we can see no reason why Cleveland shouldn't have as good a chance to win as any other club. These two things are as follows:

1. If the club doesn't bump into a bad run of luck and loss the services of Speaker or other stars. 2. If the usual morale it has shown can stand up under reverses.

The Early Part of It Cleveland so far obtained the jump for these reasons—her club has tried harder and hustled harder than any other club we have seen. And she has gotten the best pitching of the year, backed up by the wonderful outfield range of Tris Speaker.

Cleveland has a first-class pitching staff in Morton, Bagby, Coube, Coveleskie and Klepper. This staff is good enough without further injuries to the year. Now, if the Indians can continue hustling in the face of bad breaks that may come later at the top as any other contender. For the American League race this season is going to be an open proposition. The three supposedly stronger teams, Tigers, White Sox and Red Sox, are evidently not at all prevailing and as powerful as they once looked to be. They will be good clubs later on, but not good enough to overshadow the others. In an open race of this sort where there are many contenders, the club that gets the big jump has a greater advantage than usual. Cleveland has this jump, and by the time Chapman and Klepper get right again there is enough good stuff there to stay around the top.

As for the Giants When the Giants started West they looked to many like a sure second division club. But even in defeat they had one feature in their favor—a powerful attack. Those who follow baseball closely know what this means. When a ball club isn't hitting it is pretty sure to lose heart in other departments. A ball player esteems his base hits above all other details. When he is hitting, even in defeat, it is hard to destroy his job.

With the Giants it merely was a question of pitching. The power was there on offense—the power and the speed. For several weeks the pitching was worse than spotty. But there always was a chance that a staff composed of Tereau, Anderson, Benton, Perritt, Stroud and Mathewson would develop at least four reliable

The reason that Jimmy Burke is not competing for Lehigh University is that he wanted to run when he fell so inclined, and Coach Connors could not see it that way.
