First Performance of "Mr. Rip Van Winkle" Will Be Held Tonight by Members of Mask and Wig Club—Other Entertainments

THE much-looked-forward-to performance of the Mask and Wig will be given tonight at the Forrest Theatre, and many are the doting mamma and papa, as well as the sisters and sweethearts, who, dressed in their "bestest," will occupy boxes and seats to hear the young and budding geniuses in their latest song and dance. "Mr. Rip Van Winkle," I believe, is the enchanting name of the performance, but these airy playwrights have changed his history a bit, so that instead of becoming twenty years older, as the original Rip did, this one goes away younger, and there is consequently "the dickens to pay" when this gay young man returns to find his home about to be sold. However, as the fairy tales go, he gets there in time and all turns out well, but in the turning out there are many occasions for the boys to appear in the latest modes, curly locks and fetching hats. They look so like girls it is hard to realize they are not. But let them once speak and "it's all off," for many are the voices which "percolate" through those rosebud mouths. Oh, the agonies those tender maidens suffer in order to look just right! A story was told me recently by a tottering Mask and Wigger of the early days. "You see I was to be a lady in a rolling chair on the Atlantic City Boardwalk, and in THOSE days I was sylphlike (you may not believe it, but true it was), and unfortunately my supports were very long and very, oh, very thin, so after giving the matter much thought I hid me to Miss [redacted], at the costume's, and confided to her my awful secret. 'Don't worry, my dear,' said she. 'I'll give you a pair of legs to be proud of.' So she gave me one of those buckram contrivances which make shapely understandings, and, arrayed in all my glory, with brown frock and golden curls, I was pushed on to the stage in my chair. Right to the front we went, but right there on the front row was a mean cuss who cried out to his best girl, 'Pipe Jim's legs!' Like all men Jim could not stand ridicule, and so he then and there as soon as his chorus left the stage proceeded to remove the buckram understandings and returned in the later acts with the pipe stems instead."

AMONG those who will entertain at the first performance tonight are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Lovering, who will give a dinner for their daughter Mary at the Ritz-Carlton before the show. The Gustavus Wynne Cooks will give a dinner and theatre party for Emley, who is to make her debut next winter. Nancy came out this year, you know, and they are both mighty attractive girls, by the way.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Pritchard will entertain at the theatre and then give a supper at the Ritz-Carlton for their daughter Elizabeth, who is to be a debutante for next year also.

One large party will be given by Heck-scher and Edwina Wetherill, who have just lately returned from Florida. They will entertain their guests after the performance at the Mask and Wig clubhouse, on Quince street. Still another party will be given by Mrs. J. Barton Townsend, Jr., of Overbrook, and the Perry Allens will entertain for Gabriella Hopkinson and Jay Patterson, who are to be married Saturday of this week.

IT APPEARS that a rumor has gone about that Mr. and Mrs. Manlie Fielding will entertain at the Philadelphia Cricket Club tonight. Isn't it funny how these ideas get about with no foundation whatsoever? Not only are the Fieldings not going to give a dance, but they never even thought of giving one. Perhaps the rumor started through some one's idea of a practical joke, but it seems to me a pretty poor one.

THERE will probably be very few if any entertainments during the coming weeks, unless Red Cross work is the object in view, as Americans will not be apt to spend freely in entertaining while the country is at war. There will be many things for us to spend our pennies on besides enjoyment. However, as all work, much sorrow and no play may make Jack a more than dull and melancholy boy, a little enjoyment, or rather recreation, now and then will not be mis-understood. NANCY WYNNE.

PELLUCIDAR

Sequel to "At the Earth's Core." BY EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS Author of the "Tarzan" Stories

I HEARD the sound of a scuffle in the next cave. Then my fingers sank into loose rock and earth in the side of the cave. In an instant I realized why I had been unable to fire, and opening my eyes I had been lightly feeling the surface of the wall—Dian had blocked up the hole she had made last I aroise suspicion and led to an early discovery of Juag's escape. Plunging my way into the darkness of the rumbling mass, I sent it crashing into the adjoining cavern. With it came I, David, Emperor of Pellucidar. I doubt if any other potentate went a before's history ever made more undignified entrance. I landed head first on all fours, but I came quickly and was on my feet before the man in the dark. I guessed what had happened, and I saw, though with a little aroise, sensing that no friend came thus precipitately, turned to meet me even as I charged him. I had my stone knife in my hand, and he had his. In the darkness of the cave there was little opportunity for a display of science, though even at that I venture to say that we fought a very pretty duel.

Before I came to Pellucidar I do not recall that I ever had seen a stone knife, and I am sure that I never found with a knife of any description; but now I do not take my hat off to any of them when it comes to wielding that primitive yet wicked weapon. I could just see Dian in the darkness, but I knew that she could not see my features or recognize me; and I enjoyed in anticipation, even while I was fighting for her life and mine, her dear joy when she should discover that it was I who was her deliverer.

My opponent was large, but he also was active and no mean knife-man. He came once fairly in the shoulder—I carried the spear, yet I should have been ready to take my hat off to any of them when it comes to wielding that primitive yet wicked weapon. I could just see Dian in the darkness, but I knew that she could not see my features or recognize me; and I enjoyed in anticipation, even while I was fighting for her life and mine, her dear joy when she should discover that it was I who was her deliverer.

"You are not Juag!" she exclaimed. "Who are you?" I took a step toward her, my arms outstretched. "It is I, David," I said. "It is David." At the sound of my voice she gave a little cry in which tears were mingled—a pathetic little cry that told me all without words. She had seen me, and she had seen herself in my arms. I covered her perfect lips and her beautiful face with kisses, and stroked her cheek with my hand, and then she again and again what she already knew, what she had known for years—that I loved her better than all else which this world had to offer. We couldn't devote much time to the matter of our escape, for we were in the midst of enemies who might discover us at any moment.

I drew her into the adjoining cave. There was a small opening, then passed for an instant, listening. No sound reached our ears, indicating that any had seen us, and we moved cautiously onward along the cave, which had given me entrance to the cliff. Here I reconnoitered for a moment, and seeing the coast clear, ran swiftly forth with Dian at my side. We dodged about, then, then paused for a moment, listening. No sound reached our ears, indicating that any had seen us, and we moved cautiously onward along the cave, which had given me entrance to the cliff.
