Educational

Of course, it won't do to suppress the freedom of our papers, but why not make our foreign press desist from cutting capers by publishing disguised attacks and veiled insinuations in language whose translation lacks its real interpretations? The English language all should use and if we once decreed it, all those who hanker for the news would have to learn to read it. From every corner of the orb we draw our population and blindly trust they will absorb the spirit of our nation, and still we give our editors unlimited permission to plant the seed of future wars and nourish old tradition, to keep them thinking of the land they left to live with strangers. No wonder that we have a band of hyphenated dangers. Man thinks the language that he speaks, it favors his emotions, so why encourage one that reeks with European notions? Let's make them read United States and learn to speak it, too. Then they'll forget their old world hates and think the way we do.

"Will Jack be a good provider, do you think?"
 "Oh, yes. He can borrow money whenever he wants it."

The Young Lady Across the Way

The young lady across the way says she wonders if the common people of Germany will ever be able to understand that we're not fighting them but only the cruel bourgeoisie that rules them.
