

YESTERDAY

American Women Have Always Played a Prominent Part in Every Fight for Freedom and the Right

In Colonial days they fought shoulder to shoulder with their men against the Indians; in the Revolution Molly Pitcher typifies the indomitable spirit of American womanhood, a spirit of courage and self-sacrifice without which the colonists must have failed in their struggle for freedom.

Now once more the destiny of the nation is in the hands of its women—it is for them to say how quickly we will win this war.

For only as women fill the ever-widening gaps in the ranks of industry can we keep a steady stream of supplies flowing to our boys overseas.

They are willing to make the supreme sacrifice to save you from sharing the fate of Belgium's women and children. The least you can do is to see that they do not want for anything they need in their job of licking the Hun.

TODAY

There Is a Well-Paid Position Awaiting Every Able-Bodied Woman, Young or Old, Married or Single
