

Nancy Wynne Tells of the Work at Lancaster Inn—A Son Is Born to Lieutenant and Mrs. Conger—Other Matters of Social Interest

HAVE you seen the inside of the emergency hospital at Lancaster Inn? You know everything in it has been lent and every piece of furniture and equipment is tagged, so that it looks like a museum. The women of the Main Line have been doing wonderful work out there and Mrs. Thomas Branson has been most faithful at it. They have tea every afternoon in the nurses' sitting room for the nurses, members of the motor corps and aides, and the doctors have lunch there every day at 1:30 and talk things over together.

Mrs. Walter Christie is in charge of the household department and there are volunteer workers every day, who wash dishes, arrange the linen and cut flowers for the forty-five patients that are now in the hospital. The whole thing is financed, you know, by the Red Cross and the township committee. Another thing that volunteer workers have done out there is to keep one of the laundries open. With so many demands on its capacity and many of its employees down with influenza, it would have been entirely abandoned if it hadn't been for these women, who went there and on their hands and knees, washed and laid things as they were, to release the people who ordinarily do it for the regular laundries.

I think we owe a vote of thanks to the women who have been doing this volunteer work—and are still doing it. They haven't hesitated for a minute and their work has been of the most trying kind. Mrs. John Wanamaker, Jr., of the Emperer Co. Aid, who had charge of the emergency nursery for children whose parents were sick, is still busy arranging for the children who have had the disease themselves to be sent to the country or to some place where they will be well taken care of and fed while they are getting over it.

WERENT you delighted to hear that Jack and Katherine Conger have a little son? He was born on Monday, and he is to be named John De Feyster Conger, Jr. Quite a coincidence! His little cousin, Katherine Clark's baby, Bayard Stockton Clark, was born in New Haven last week. Katherine Clark and Jack Conger are sister and brother, you know, and the little cousins will doubtless be close friends. The Clarks are in New Haven for the winter, as Frank Clark is in the service there. Lieutenant Conger is stationed at Camp Upton, though he has been given a two weeks' leave at present and has therefore seen his small son.

Mrs. Conger was Katherine Hare, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Emitt Hare, of this city, and sister of Phyllis Hare Yarrow, René and Emlen Hare. Since her marriage she has been living with her husband's family, as Jack has been in camp most of the time.

DON'T you feel proud when you actually know one of the men who have been commended? I do. I just fairly gulped with joy when I learned that Vaughan Merrick had been commended by Major General Muir for fighting on for two hours after he had been wounded, refusing to be relieved or to leave his men. Bob Jefferys, too, was spoken of. Those boys were both in the "Troop A" and were transferred into the infantry. Vaughan is a brother of Mrs. McKean Downs, who was Anne Merrick, and he has two other sisters, Mary and Catherine, and a brother, Rodney Merrick. They are a devoted and united family and must be proud of Vaughan's fine record.

Bob Jefferys is the son of Dr. Jefferys, who is rector of St. Peter's Church. He is "over there" also as chaplain with the Episcopal Hospital unit.

IN THE midst of all the fighting and horrors overseas it doesn't take an American long to pick out the bright spots, and it doesn't take him very much longer to write them down and send them home. A captain who has been over there for a long time and has seen his company pretty well shot to pieces, wrote an interesting letter the other day. He told very little of the fighting, but he did tell a good story.

It was about one of our gallant colored fighters who was strolling along a muddy road. A big gun was stationed nearby, but it was so well camouflaged that he knew nothing about it until he suddenly "ris up" and sent a large H. E. across to Jerry with such a thundering roar that the wandering Yank was thrown completely off his feet and out of his self-possession. "Good Lawd!" he exclaimed, feeling for broken bones, "count your man siew, Mr. Kaiser!"

RED CROSS FACTORY NO. 1 HAS RESUMED ITS WORK

Plant Had Been Closed While Workers Nursed Grip Victims. Help Needed

The American Red Cross Volunteer Factory No. 1, at 1315 Market street, has resumed operations after a shut-down of two weeks. The plant was closed when it became apparent during the epidemic of influenza that the need for nurses was more urgent than the demands made for clothing for the Belgians and French.

The majority of the women workers who have been producing clothing at the factory volunteered their services as nurses when the epidemic got beyond the control of the city's regular staffs and aided the sufferers here.

The need for these workers at the factory is now urgent, as the time lost during the two weeks the machines were idle must be made up. Prospects of an early peace have led us to look in view of the fact that millions of persons in the war-torn lands of Europe must be clothed by this country for some time after the war ends.

Directors of the factory, which is a branch of the Southeastern Pennsylvania Chapter of the Red Cross, plan to ask chairmen of all of the small auxiliaries of the organization in the city to volunteer as for volunteer workers to devote part of their time to the plant each week to aid in satisfying the demands made for warm clothing for the Belgians and French.

The Eggs of the Blue Imps

(Peggy is captured by the Blue Imps, who are carrying her away to the Valley of Gloom, when the Giant of the Woods rescues her.)

CHAPTER III "THE BLUE IMPs"

"THIS is very serious! We must help Mrs. Dalton at once," declared the Giant when the Woodsman brought word that the Blue Imps had captured the mother of the two soldier boys, Ben and Bill. "Will you aid us, Sir Ready Smiler?" he called to the leader of the Rosy Peps.

"Sure we will—if Princess Peggy will give us strength," responded the handsome pink knight.

"Do anything I can," promised Peggy, who was still a bit confused over the strange appearance of the Blue Imps, and their attack on her. She didn't know how she could give strength to the Rosy Peps, but she was perfectly willing to try.

"Come on, then! We must hurry," cried the Giant. With that he swung Peggy to his arm and set off at a stride that carried him over the hills and through the woods. Rosy Peps followed in military formation, like flying cavalry.

"Isn't it funny the way those Blue Imps exploded when the Rosy Peps punctured them," chuckled Peggy.

"Yes," agreed the Giant. "The Blue Imps, like a lot of our other troubles, swell up with air, and when they are punctured they let them, but if we just prick them they promptly blow up and are gone."

"What would they have done to me if you hadn't come along?" asked Peggy.

"They'd have taken you to the Valley of Gloom, an awful place filled with poisonous gases, and there they would have kept you and tortured you until you wasted away, and maybe lost your mind or died."

"How horrible!" Peggy shuddered again, and her face grew gloomy as she thought of the fate she had escaped. She was glad she was protected now by the valiant Rosy Peps. She looked up gratefully, only to gasp in dismay. The Rosy Peps were flying away as fast as they could.

"Here, here, call them back again!" shouted the Giant, looking so upset Peggy couldn't help laughing at him.

"That's it! Laugh! Laugh!" roared the Giant, giggling her up and down until Peggy shrieked with glee. And as she shrieked, the Rosy Peps came swooping back as chitter and sager as ever.

"Keep smiling!" whispered the Giant. "They are afraid of our faces and run away from them. That gives us Blue Imps a chance to take possession."

"I'd smile and smile," replied Peggy, who by this time was her old cheerful self again. She had a blue cloud in her eyes, but she was smiling.

"That's the imp army around Mrs. Dalton's home," said the Giant.

"My gracious, can we break through?" asked Peggy, looking at the address. He led her to the farm house—a mist that she could now see was made up of thousands and thousands of Blue Imps.

"We have broken through," insisted the Giant. "The Blue Imps are slowly poisoning Mrs. Dalton, and are planting their eggs in her ink so that when she writes to her soldier boys, her letters carry hundreds of Blue Imps over there to weaken the morale of our fighters. Do you know what 'moral' means?"

"Of course I do," replied Peggy. "It means grit and courage and determination to 'break the Hun.'"

"You're right. That's why we have to blow up the Hunish Blue Imps over here if we're to prevent their weakening our boys over there."

"Princess Peggy, we are ready to attack," cried Sir Ready Smiler, as they halted in front of the man of scowling Blue Imps that surrounded the Dalton home. "Will you lead us with a song and dance?"

Peggy thought this was a queer way to go into battle, but she was soon to find it a mighty good way in attacking the Blue Imps.

(Tomorrow will be told how Peggy, the Giant and the Rosy Peps fight through the Blue Imp army.)

AMERICAN SOLDIERS SING WHILE FIGHTING

Wounds Do Not Disturb Cheerfulness of "Beloved Yanks," Says Miss Norris

Cheerfulness of the American soldier is never-fading. He goes into battle singing and he comes out singing, no matter if he is wounded.

This is the picture of the "beloved Yanks" given by Miss Sophie Beauveau Norris, who has just returned from France, where she was a canteen manager for the Y. M. C. A. and a Red Cross worker. Miss Norris is at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. Helde Norris, School House lane, near Gypsy lane, Germantown.

"They sing going into battle—they sing coming back," she said. "They sing and cheer and shout and scream and holler and laugh. Oh! the wonderful fellows! No one who has not seen them can possibly have an idea of their courage."

"I shall never forget one night in the town of Toul, shortly before the glorious started to sing. I wish I were a janitor's girl. The Fifth and Sixth Marines were there—the boys who had fought at Chateau-Thierry—and the girls of the "Piper Red Soldier" danced in the streets with them. Into the gutter and out of it, over the awful obstructions! And a big French band blaring away! And the whole town running out to see it and standing around the world, impromptu dancing floor in a large circle!"

"But one of the boys got tired of the slow French waltzes and he snatched a skulie and started to dance with one of the girls. He plucked himself in the center of the ring and, in a pathetic voice that I shall never forget if I live to be 100 years old, started to sing. I wish I were a janitor's child, alternating the chorus with a ridiculous parody on an Irish jig!"

"And when they came back, wounded in streams, in streams I tell you after that, I saw the faces of the boys and girls. They had not changed a mite. As soon as their dressings had been changed at the evacuation hospital, the boys and girls were wanted to do was to send postal cards to the folks back home. And not one, not one of them, wrote that he was wounded."

"The boys' passion for gathering souvenirs, as all the world knows, is unbounded. There was one big fellow with both his arms shot away, poor chap, and yet he was holding an Austrian helmet in his lap, squeaking it frantically between his knees!"

"Of course, the German wounded, too, came back and were treated just the same as the American boys. But, I must confess, there was at first some prejudice on the part of us girls as to whether we would feed them or not. Finally we decided to give them hot coffee, because that was necessary, but to refuse to present them with chocolate, jam and cigarettes."

"They should have heard the American girls!" they shouted. "Well, if you are, feed Fritzie, and feed him well!"

"Finally we decided to print into my memory as if it were etched. One infantry man, his arm shattered by a shell, recognized me as I was bringing him something to drink. 'Do you remember the quartet we used to have?' he said, 'before this big scrap came off, and how we used to sing close harmony at night? Well—the quartet is gone. I'm the only one left. It's a solo now—and a darned poor one at that!'"

URGUE WOMEN AGAINST CUTTING LABOR PRICES

Trade Union League Sees Industrial Crisis if Practice Is Continued

That women insist upon equal wages for equal work with men, not only for their own protection in trade, but for the protection of men workers, is a point receiving the earnest attention of the Women's Trade Union League, this city.

It was stated today that women going into work hitherto solely in the hands of men, doing it as well as men and not insisting upon equal pay, were paving the way for a crisis in the labor situation.

A case was cited of a firm which advertised for women workers on the lines that patriotic women should release men for the war. The job was one previously done by men, who received an excellent wage. Women who took up this job were paid, it was said, about $6 a week less than the wage of a man in antebellum days.

It was explained that the result of women's accepting such conditions is damaging both to themselves and to men who are not able to get a war position and who must support families at a time when the cost of living has nearly doubled. Naturally, when such cheap labor is obtainable for work which can be as ably accomplished by women as by men, it was pointed out, no employer would be likely to keep positions open for men who would not accept such wages.

"This question will be the subject under discussion at several meetings of the Women's Trade Union League, 248 South Eighth street. The next of these meetings will be held early in November."

CANTEEN ON BOARDWALK

PHONOGRAPH RECORD QUIETS MEN IN WAR

Appeal for Discs for Army Use Emphasized by Striking Example

To meet a really great need for phonograph records for the soldiers there has been organized the national record recruiting corps, of which the chairman is Major General Franklin Bell. The committee in charge is composed of eighty men and women.

Major Bell writes: "The person who gives a record for the use of our boys gives something that will cheer and inspire them as nothing else can." Two fragments of letters from overseas make a touching appeal for the joys of the beloved "canned music."

A corporal who shall be nameless here writes: "We have just one talking machine and it is fasted, and many weeks in advance. Each sergeant of the billet can engage it for an evening for his men. The records are a poor broken-down collection, but they are always being played, because it is just a little bit of home in a far country."

The other letter says: "My men were shell-shock victims, and when they first saw me they thought I might be a deserter. Their night serenades my hands were full. There seemed to be no way of quieting the poor fellows while the flashes in the sky and the roar of the guns raged. The next night I brought in a little talking machine, shut all the doors and windows, picked out the loudest record I could find and played it for grim death. It worked wonders. It took their minds off the guns. All night long I played that little instrument until the bombardment ceased, and they slept quietly until morning."

This is "Records for Fighters" week. Every home has been asked to dig out old records and contribute them, giving them to the local dealer, who will forward them to headquarters.

The records must be in good condition, for one is asked not to send any record of the use of the boys at war in the trenches and at the hospitals that one would not play one's self. Or one can send money to buy a small machine or records or albums.

DOCTOR ISAAC NORRIS, PHYSICIAN - SCIENTIST

Was Among Founders of the Philadelphia Free Library

Isaac Norris, M. D., member of the well-known family, residents of Philadelphia since early Colonial times, died October 22, at Florence, Italy, after a short illness, in his eighty-fifth year. Doctor Norris was born in Philadelphia June 12, 1844. He was a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania in the class of 1862, and received the degree of doctor of medicine three years later. During the Civil War he served as acting assistant surgeon at the general hospital in Philadelphia, and after the war as physician to the Philadelphia Dispensary. From 1866 to 1876 he was professor of chemistry at the Central High School, Philadelphia.

Doctor Norris was a member of many scientific societies and institutions for the advancement of knowledge. He was a great book lover, and during his long lifetime acquired a very large library on general subjects, now at the residence of his son, near Bryn Mawr. For many years he worked hard to create an interest for a free library for Philadelphia, and lived the rest of his life to see that interest grow from a small beginning to great proportions.

He was a fellow of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and for two years after a director of the Franklin Institute, member of the American Philosophical Society, Academy of Natural Sciences, Historical Society of Pennsylvania, etc. He was a great traveler and in recent years spent much of his time abroad.
