Return of Philadelphia From Overseas—Nancy Wynne Takes in Exhibition on Roof of Bellevue-Stratford—Two Sudan Deaths—Illustrated Address on Saturday

I HEAR that Major W. Plunkett Stewart has returned from overseas. He was with the remount department and came back on the George Washington, which arrived on Tuesday in New York. He is at present in Haverford, where the Stewarts make their home at Cheswood, the Cassatt place. Mrs. Stewart, you remember, was Miss Elsie Cassatt, the youngest daughter of Mrs. Alexander J. Cassatt. Plunkett Stewart, Victor Mather, R. Penn Smith, Jr., Robert Strawbridge and Antelo Devereux are just a few of the Philadelphia men who were in the remount department of the service.

SPEAKING of the service makes me think of the French. Have you seen the exhibition of pictures on the Bellevue-Stratford roof? And have you had your picture drawn by the French sergeant there? Sophie Norris and Mrs. Henry Thouron have had dandy likenesses. Every afternoon this week the women on the French committee are receiving and having tea there at the exhibition. I stopped in on Tuesday and saw Mrs. Robert Montgomery, Mrs. Thouron, Mrs. Shippen Willing, Mrs. Ned Halsey and Mrs. Charlie Snelson there, and on Monday Mrs. Joe Leidy and Mrs. Harold Yarnall were in charge of the afternoon, together with Sophie Norris, Miss Kate Hutchinson and Miss Helen Caldwell.

WHAT a dreadful shock Mrs. Robert Massey Drayton's death was yesterday! Pneumonia again. It seems as if most of the sudden deaths this year have been brought about by that dread disease. And what a tragedy for her young daughter, too! In all my experience I have never seen such devotion and love as existed between that mother and daughter. Evelyn was her only child, and during the last three or four years has been very ill. It is only about a year since she has been able to go about again and take part in the parties and affairs of other children, and the first of this month her mother gave a card party and supper for her. Mrs. Drayton was Anna Jones and a daughter of the late Charles Henry Jones of this city, and a sister of Miss Evelyn Jones. She married Bob Drayton about sixteen years ago. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Edward Drayton and a brother of Hayward Drayton, of New York. Mrs. Drayton had pneumonia last week, but only on Wednesday did it develop into a serious illness and pneumonia setting in, her death soon followed. It seems particularly sad for her daughter, who, though now well, still requires much care, and there's no love like a mother's love, as we all know.

The funeral will take place tomorrow in Whitmarsh.

ANOTHER shock was the death of Mrs. Scammon Jones on Tuesday. She was known to very many people, who remembered her as the pretty Maggie Elliot. She was a sister of the late William Elliot, a prominent musician, and Mrs. Jones sang beautifully herself. She taught voice culture for many years and married Mr. Jones rather late in life, though she was by no means old. She was always particularly proud of her pupil, Elizabeth Latta, who has made such a place for herself in the musical world with her lovely mezzo voice. Of course, Mrs. Jones was known just as widely socially as professionally, and was one of the greatest belles in her younger days. She was an aunt of Louise, Josephine, Myra and Adele Elliot, most of whom are married now.

I HEAR that there's to be an interesting illustrated talk on Saturday night at the New Century Club, under the auspices of the Penn School Club of Philadelphia. Mr. Francis R. Cope, Jr., will give the address, and it will be illustrated by the moving picture, "Cephas's Return." It's for the benefit of the Penn Normal, Industrial and Agricultural School at St. Helena Island, S. C. This school, I believe, was started by northern men and women just after the battle of Fort Royal in 1862, and the first schoolhouse was sent down in sections from this city. So you see we really have a responsibility down there; we've started something, and it's sort of up to us to finish it. It is a school for colored children, and I hear that there are about 6000 colored people living just there in that section. I don't know what the movie is like, but I rather imagine that it is a story of the region and the school and its work, which will be very instructive.

I HEAR that the Near New Shop at 809 Chestnut street did such a successful day's business yesterday that the committee had to close it at 6 o'clock in order to replenish their stock. Everything was about sold out. And it didn't open again until 11 this morning. I've noticed the stunning evening gowns and things in the window and I'm not surprised that they have been snapped up right away. These rummage sales are so successful that it's more a question of getting enough stuff to sell than getting enough people to buy. This one is for the Social Service of the Polyclinic Hospital, you know.

THE school set certainly has had one grand and glorious time lately, with holidays and parties and things. But do you know, it's been awfully hard, especially on the hostesses, to arrange dances and things on the right date, because one school starts its vacation just as another school finishes, and the best friends who attend different schools miss each other by one day, and it's most difficult. Some of them haven't even started yet, waiting until the week before Easter to start their holiday, but still, with all that they do have a good time, and I don't see how the ones who are at school here have time to do anything but go from one dance to another. I can't begin to tell you of the array of parties for tonight and tomorrow night. And the best part of it is that they always have a perfectly wonderful time, never get tired of it, and each party is more wonderful than the last.

ART AND MUSIC STUDY IN LIBRARY INCREASES

War May Be Cause of Enlarged Interest Here, as Shown by Annual Report

Whether or not the war has had anything to do with it, librarians are loath to say, but the fact remains that interest in art and music has increased tremendously in the last two years in Philadelphia.

The facts are shown by figures in the twenty-second annual report of the Free Library of Philadelphia, just published. The art department of the library was used by 40,778 persons during the year, an increase of more than 10,000 over the previous year. The collections of books dealing with architecture, costume and interior decoration have been in constant use throughout the year, and the demand for these subjects is increasing as the size and scope of the collection become better known.

This may be due, librarians believe, to the fact that the folk at home want to acquaint themselves with the art and architecture of countries in which their boys were fighting. The boys have seen such of these things first hand, and the home folk may not want to be considered ignorant. It is pointed out, however, that the art and architecture of England, France, Italy and in special cities of Europe have been most popular.

The music department issued, for home use, for a period of four weeks, 10,254 volumes of scores and musical textbooks. This is an increase of more than 2000 over the number lent during any previous year. And in response to the requests for an increased amount of reference work has been done by the members of the library staff.

"Collection of folk songs and folk dances, for which there have been many requests, were among the accessories during the year," explained the librarian. "There have been many requests for compositions by modern French composers." The total circulation was $148,509, showing an increase of $31,159 over the circulation of the previous year. The number of persons counted consulting or reading books in the library was 128,942, an increase of 26,820 volumes over the previous year. And 32,575 checks had not previously made use of the library were given readers' cards.

"We made no record of the number of children who use books in the library for study or recreation," explained the librarian. "But, after school hours, the reading tables were crowded with children from nine to sixteen years old. They represented many of the most recent, children who did not borrow books for home use." "One of the most gratifying phases of the year's work in this department is the more definite and effective co-operation between the free library and the schools. Many of the parochial, as well as public schools, have asked to have closer relations established between their classes and the nearest branch library. Instruction in the use of the card catalogue and the simpler reference books is offered all school children. The instruction is given in the children's room by appointment with the teachers, who accompany the classes, and the adapted to the needs and age of the pupils of all grades. The library also supplies the teachers, as far as the present insufficient number of books will permit, with small collections of books on special subjects for use in class rooms.

"The story hour for children has brought results in the increased circulation of the new familiar books. More than 56,812 children attended the 218 story hours last year. Heroic folk lore and legends of the Allied nations were most popular. Pictures of flags were much used and the children's reading was towards works of history and travel." The names of 132 new borrowers of books for the blind were added last year. Of these 250 in Philadelphia; 67 in Pennsylvania and 55 in other states.

Seventy-six traveling libraries were sent out, thirty-three to free stations, five to police stations, and thirty-eight to other addresses. The library has done much work during the last year, as in the previous year, and has increased and maintained a traveling library at the United States navy yard; has carried on the campaign for books for soldiers; and has supplied books and periodicals for reconstruction hospitals.

United States District Attorney Kane will preside at the meeting and Paul D. Cravath, chief counsel for the government, will preside over the Fisk University, will be among the speakers. A pageant entitled "A New Generation in the March of Democracy" will be another direct result of the program. The pageant will depict the social activities of the negro. Selections of negro folk songs will be sung by the Fisk University Jubilee Singers. The singers will include: James Myers, Miss Helena L. Lewis, Lemuel L. Foster and James Myers. The Armstrong Association has been successful in securing opportunities for negroes in industries. Last month, representatives of the association visited eleven factories employing negro girls, and fifteen industries employing negro men. Positions were found for twenty-eight girls in factories last month by the association, and employment was obtained for sixty-five negro men.

The Progressive School Girls' Club, under the auspices of the Armstrong Association, is finishing. Sixty girls attended the last meeting. The activities of the Armstrong Association among the negroes of Philadelphia are limited through lack of funds.

NOTABLE CONCERT ENTHRALLS CROWD IN WANAMAKER STORE

Great Organ—Largest in the World—and Philadelphia Orchestra Combine in Rendering Program Before Probably the Biggest Audience of Music Lovers in the City's History

The crowd which assembled in the Wanamaker store last evening to attend the concert which closed the Musicians' Assembly evening was probably the greatest that ever heard a concert in Philadelphia, if not in the entire country. Every available bench and cranny was filled with persons anxious to hear the great new organ, now complete, in conjunction with the Philadelphia orchestra. The organ, which is now by far the largest in the world, contains 218 speaking stops. Originally it had 149, but since its installation in the Wanamaker building ninety-two have been added.

The organ was played by Mr. Charles M. Courboin, recognized as one of the masters of the instrument. The orchestra was conducted by Mr. Stokowski, who has recovered from the illness that necessitated his absence from the concert of Friday and Saturday of last week.

The concert opened with the splendid Passacaglia in C minor by Johann Sebastian Bach, played by M. Courboin. The work, gigantic alike in conception and in composition, must have been familiar with the work of the great master in the seeming simplicity of its harmony, especially in the suspensions, where Debussy and other modern composers must have found a rich field, as well as the dignity of its melodies and the completeness of every detail of composition. M. Courboin played it with a full understanding both of the work as a whole and of the details which he used. Magnificent indeed was the result, in spite of its size, equaled anything on the program, for the music of Bach never grows old.

Beethoven Overture Exquisitely Rendered This was followed by the Leonore No. 3 Overture of Beethoven, played by the orchestra. This, too, was finely done, although the orchestra was somewhat at a disadvantage by reason of the enormous height of the building and the manner of seating which directed the audience away from the orchestra. Mr. Stokowski received an ovation on his appearance to lead the "Star Spangled Banner" and another when he took his place to conduct the overture.

The last number of the first part consisted of four selections for the organ, a cantata from the "Pledge Symphonique" of Cesar Franck, an allegro by de Bock and the "Chorale No. 3" by Franck. These were played by M. Courboin, with admirable technique, and with taste and feeling. The second part began with two familiar numbers, "L'Après Midi d'un Faune," of Debussy, and the Prelude and Liebestod of Tristan and Isolde, played by the orchestra. Mr. Stokowski's conducting was superb in both of which he excels, in better form than he did last evening, and the orchestra appeared to follow his lead with even more sympathy than usual. Both were greeted with prolonged applause.

The first movement is full of majesty and dignity, having somewhat of the character of the orchestra reiterates the main theme several times, to be answered by a series of variations or, perhaps one might say, of the orchestra, and only the more strictly variations (really the fourth, as the second and third were omitted), is full of melodic beauty, while the last is another vigorous allegro.

"Eleven Pertinent Questions" To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—I know no better way to cast a vote and send some of the world's great men to cover a copy of the last issue of Harper's Weekly. I might call your attention to each one of the articles as a sound and logical nation, but will direct your attention to one only under the caption "Eleven Pertinent Questions," and I will say that for the correct answer to most of them there can be but one answer. I will donate to charity the sum of $100. I consider that the most dangerous man in the world today is he who, under the pretense of setting up a league of peace, hides his real intention of making a league of socialism and a war between labor and capital.

"The Dog License Law" To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—When a man pays a license for his dog the dog should be given his freedom until such time as he has been found to be a nuisance. A dog on a leash is more liable to get into mischief and bite people than one running free. The police fine one for not muzzling a dog, and the S. P. C. A. has one fine for keeping a dog on a leash. It is the dog's duty to get rid of the cruel thing. Where do you see muzzles on dogs any more? The general public and the dogs will not stand for such inhuman abuse. I offered to pay $100 a year that would give my dog "Bobby" entire freedom on the highway without muzzling, but was denied such privilege. To save trouble I parted with my friend.

"Praises Editorial on Our Loan" To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—I was delighted to read your editorial on the Victory Liberty Loan in your issue of Saturday night. It is the slogan that we all have to put across during the coming campaign. J. H. MARON, Director Philadelphia, March 21.

"Likes Talks of Our Music Critic" To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—I am glad to express to you my great admiration of the very excellent music articles which appear weekly in your Saturday editions. Also of the splendid criticisms of the principal musical events which you are having. I have become a regular reader of your paper through these articles which were first brought to my attention by the Philadelphia Public Ledger. My only objection to these Saturday articles is that they are too short. They certainly supply a long-felt want to the music lovers of our city. CLARA LICKEL Philadelphia, March 18.

"To the Men Who Framed the Bill" To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—Here is an article I saw in the Stars and Stripes. It reflects the sentiments of the men of the Philadelphia Police Department. To the gentlemen who framed the bill: "You have slapped us in the face. A small stripe. Not much, is it? A mother who has a year will not care if her son returns after a year of going over the top, without a stripe." WISTAR P. BROWN Philadelphia, March 27.
