RUTH felt like the college man who, having just graduated, expects to get the world on fire immediately by his wonderful ability and his interest in filing cards or something of the kind in order to make him familiar with the business in hand.

tation which lay in her lap. This would mean an expensive gift, something that she would be ashamed of, something that would make a hole in Scott's capital just then. Perhaps this was meant as a pointer to her, this invitation on top of the offer of a position, indicative perhaps of the fact that she ought to take the job. There was her dress, too. If she and Scott went to the wedding, she would have something to wear. Of course they would send a gift and stay at home, but she did want to see Jack married!

Please Tell Me What to Do

By CYNTHIA

From a "Vamp" Dear Cynthia—I am answering the letter in the EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER signed Adventure. I am a girl seventeen summers and have met quite a lot of fellows. Some of them think a girl is in love because she jollies him along, and the poor fish hasn't sense enough to see it. Nine out of ten are taken in and don't know it. So, Adventure, don't let yourself be fooled by a "vamp." You might think you're wise, but I bet you if I could only be with you for about two or three hours I would have you eating out of my hand. Adventure, you're talking through your hat, and you're taking a little poison on account of you, so don't think yourself a heartbreaker. A VAMP.

Boys Aren't Heart-Breakers

Dear Cynthia—You have kindly printed two letters of which I was the author, and now may I ask you to publish a third? This time I direct my slams and bangs at the greatest of heartbreakers, "Adventure." So, Adventure, you agree with Babe that we boys—nine out of ten mathematically speaking—are heartbreakers, and you modestly admit that you thoroughly love said pastime. Now, tell me, how do you know you break the young ladies' hearts? Maybe they run to you with tears in their eyes, fall on their knees and beg for your love. Maybe they do; and again, maybe they don't. What is the secret of thy charms? Can it be your wonderful looks, your Rockefeller riches or your sweet, sunny disposition? Are you the matinee idol who sings, "They go wild, simply wild, over me," or a nineteen-stone Beau Brummel, handsome and bold?

More "Vamps" Heard From

Dear Cynthia—We are two girls, nineteen years old, one blonde and the other a brunette. We read the letter of "Spats" and think they have very good judgment. Why shouldn't they prefer "vamps" to those so-called "dead-enders"? Vamps are interesting, entertaining and lively, and since this is true, why shouldn't a young man choose such a girl for his wife? We think "Spats" are somewhat like ourselves, for, we, too, like our good times and we have them.

WEST PHILADELPHIA BRIGHT LIGHTS

Loaned Money for Tickets

My dear Cynthia—We read your interesting column every night and surely enjoy it. I didn't think of writing you for advice until I saw a similar case in last week's edition. This is my story: A young man had called on me several months, also taking me to the theatre and other amusements. About a month ago we went to the theatre and he went up to the box office to purchase tickets. I stood waiting for him, when suddenly he rushed toward me, saying: "What are we going to do. I changed my clothes and left my money in my other coat." I said "that will be all right. I happen to have money

BELGIAN REFUGEES LACEMAKERS

He seemed very much embarrassed and spoke of it a dozen times during the evening, assuring me that he would mail me the money immediately on his return home that evening. It didn't annoy me in the least. I was only glad that I had plenty of money with me, which I must admit was not always the case. Up to the present time I have not had the money returned nor has he called. I have passed him on Chestnut street on two occasions and know that he saw me both times, but he looked the other way.

I told my mother about it, and she advised me to write a friendly little note, telling him that I was on an allowance and that no doubt he had forgotten it, etc., almost exactly as you advised the young girl in your paper last week. That letter was written to him more than a week ago, but have not had even a line in response. I know he is at home.

Would you advise me to write again or would you simply drop it. The loss of the money doesn't annoy me nearly so much as the disappointment in him, as I liked him very much and my parents did, too. Please, Cynthia, answer in your column as soon as possible. "PERPLEXED."

I would let a month go by and then I would write again. It seems rather unlike the young man you describe to let a debt such as this go willingly, and yet there is nothing else to think when the friendship was brought to such a sudden close. In the second letter you might say that you are disappointed that he should have made the little circumstance so great an issue that it had to break off your friendship. You can give the impression that you feel he is too embarrassed to deal with the matter at all. Assure him that he need not have any feeling like this, that you loaned the money as one good pal to another, and that you dislike to ask for it, but—here bring up the subject of your allowance again. I would not let the matter drop.

REFUGEE-MADE LACE OFFERED AT BENEFIT

Lingerie on Sale Here Sent by Workers Under Patronage of Belgian Princess

TRADE REVIVAL IS SLOW

First consignment of laces and lingerie from Le Bon Secours de Jeanne d'Arc, an organization under the patronage of the Duchesse de Vendome, a widow of King Albert of Belgium, is on sale at the headquarters of the Belgian relief committee of the Emergency Aid, 1524 Walnut street. The consignment includes luncheon sets, collar and cuff sets for wash dresses, lace by the yard and exquisite hand-embroidered lingerie. The laces, which come in a great variety of designs, are filet, Brussels points, Binche, points de Venise and points de Flandre, the work of skilled lacemakers. The Duchesse organized Le Bon Secours de Jeanne d'Arc to market the lace made by Belgian women refugees, who, for the most part, had lost no one male relative in the war, and are, therefore, not entitled to a pension. The entire proceeds are returned to these women to help them get back to their homes in Belgium.

Trade Revival Slow

"We have to be patient for another half year," says the last word received by the Belgian Relief Committee from Antwerp. "The revival of trade and normal conditions will be exceedingly slow and there is no hope that before six months from now there will be regular employment available or a possibility for most people to recover their former bread-winning."

Let Us Remake Your Hair Mattresses Now

This is important and economical. If we re-make and renovate your Hair Mattresses, Box Springs, Bolsters and Pillows, we will not simply tear out their contents, shake out the broken hair and dust and then stuff it back into the ticking. But, we will expertly fill them after thoroughly sterilizing the hair or feathers, then your bedding will be antiseptically clean, and almost like new. Isn't that worth while, and different—and economical?

Penney, chairman; publicity, Mrs. Charles P. Garde, chairman; nominating committee, Ross Williams, chairman; auditing committee, Henry J. Gideon, chairman. Mrs. Joseph Uman is chairman of the supper committee, which will be in charge of the banquet which will mark the close of the conference.

APPOINT MILK ARBITRATOR

Dr. Clyde L. King to Be Price Adjuster in Pennsylvania The Pennsylvania commission of public safety announces the appointment of Dr. Clyde L. King, of the University of Pennsylvania, as milk arbitrator of Pennsylvania. The appointment was made by Frank H. McCain, executive director of the commission, on the suggestion of Governor Sproul. Dr. King, who was formerly milk inspector for the food administration of Pennsylvania, said he would continue the same kind of supervision over the milk industry as he exercised in his previous position. He is seeking information from this city and Pittsburgh which will enable him to justify the consuming public as to the justice of his prices.

My Delicious Cheese Dishes

I've found that lots of people don't know the full food value of cheese—how a tempting and delicious it can be made. But I know that for very much less money you can get more nourishment from cheese than you can from an equal amount of meat or fish. But the secret of serving it in varied and appetizing ways depends upon the preparation. Al Sauce in cheese dishes is like sugar and cream in coffee. The other day I gave Jim what he says is the most delicious dish he ever ate—and it was so simple. I toasted some bread and poured boiling water over it very fast to soften it. Then I spread the toast with a thin layer of Al Sauce, and then a generous sprinkling of grated American cheese. I left these delicious sandwiches in the oven for a moment, until the cheese melted—and if Jim ever tasted anything better than my finished product he never told me about it. I am certainly thankful for Al Sauce.—ADV.
