"TOBY'S BOW" STAGE

ROMANCE OF SOUTH

Agreeable Entertainment in Adelphi's Opening Attraction; Geo. Marion Star

If the Vardemanns of Fairfax, Fairfax county, were one of the P. F. V. it was proper not only but natural that the impetuous and proud rebels of the strain should have one of the First Butlers of Virginia as the surviving sole retainer of their dwindled glory in Uncle Toby, the title character in "Toby's Bow," which staged at the Adelphi a somewhat staid but very agreeable romance of the South as playwrights understand the South. There are no exciting but many charming moments in it.

John Taintor Foote has not written this piece with any aim of elevating the stage or chastening morals with a smile, though he has plenty of smiles and a few hearty laughs in his comedy scenes. His loftiest aspiration has been to write a play that would entertain without shocking. It can be done. He has done it. He has not wandered far afield in search of new Southland types. The familiar and easily identifiable figures of the "Old Miss," rapt in family pride and instinct with antebellum courtly graces; the tractable Confederate colonel, the drawing, popery son of the new South, and the bewitching daughter of Dixie serve to people his second and third acts with "quality folks" whose reactions, even though they can be predicted in advance, have not yet lost the power of interesting and even of charming, when as well done as this play is.

The company of Greenwich Villagers of the first act, with their careers and their light pursuit of pleasure, furnish a contrast all in favor of the straight-laced soul-sick and somewhat run-to-seed aristocrat whose current accomplishment is far below his earlier promise emigrates to the quietude of the Virginia manor, as a "paying guest," though proud "Old Miss" does not know this, or indeed the straits to which the family has been reduced. Miss Eugenie, her granddaughter, aided and abetted by the faithful and resourceful Toby, tries to keep the domestic finances running. She hopes to make a fortune by writing fiction, and thus proceed the adjustments that make the love interest of the plot possible.

Author who has harvested literary success and found it flavored with Dead Sea fruit; author aiming to break into the literary game. They collaborate in a book; that is to say, he rewrites in modern and realistic idiom her hopelessly and old-fashionedly romantic novel. He wins back his art and his soul—besides a southern bride and the right to Uncle Toby's "bow," an especially courteously observed reserved only for the "quality."

The Uncle Toby of George Marion, for many years known mainly as a stage director, but in his early days a character actor of distinction, proved a genuine creation, oversteering, perhaps, some of the droolery of the character, but never overacting the simple emotional moments of devoted fealty to the Vardemanns. David Landau was brisk and effective as the novelist and Alice Augarde, frolic as the other inch of the Dixie "grands dame" was every member of the company were well selected and excellently within the composition of the picture.

Paris Stage Strike Settled Paris, Sept. 10.—A compromise was reached yesterday in the dispute between the theatrical managers and the actors, which has resulted in the closing of the greater portion of the amusement places in Paris. It was announced that the theatres, music halls and moving-picture houses would reopen at once.

Boy Hurt as Wagon Upsets Nelson Seidle, five years old, of 2040 North Thirtieth street, is in the Women's Homeopathic Hospital in a serious condition from concussion of the brain, received last night when an express wagon, in which he was being hauled by a playmate, overturned.

HERBOTT—BAUER A pretty wedding will take place this afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Christian Bauer, 3620 Stiles street, when their daughter, Miss Freda M. Bauer, will be married to Mr. Raymond P. Herbolt, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Herbolt, of 2421 North Eighteenth street, by the Rev. C. T. Albrecht, of the Zion Presbyterian Church, Twenty-eighth and Chestnut streets.

The bride will wear a gown of white satin veiled with georgette crepe and will carry a shower of Bride roses. She will be attended by Miss Florence Wolf, who will wear a gown of pink satin veiled with pink georgette crepe, and will carry pink roses.

Mr. John Younger will be the best man. A reception will follow the ceremony, after which Mr. Herbolt and his bride will leave for Atlantic City. They will be at home after October 1, at 2451 North Eighteenth street.

MORROW—NEELY An interesting wedding will be solemnized this afternoon in the Falls of Schuylkill Presbyterian Church on Ridge avenue, when Miss Mary R. Neely, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Neely, of 3419 North Thirtieth street, will be married to Mr. John Morrow, of 3629 Calumet street, with the pastor the Rev. William B. Cooke, officiating. The bride will wear her travelling suit of dark blue with a hat to match, and will be attended by her sister, Miss Elizabeth Neely.

Mr. Elmer Morrow will be his brother's best man. After their wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Morrow will live in East Falls.

WOMEN RAILROADERS MEET Elisha Lee Speaks Before Club in West Philadelphia The first monthly meeting of the Pennsylvania Railroad Women's Club of Philadelphia, was held last night in the Pennsylvania Railroad Y. M. C. A., West Philadelphia. This meeting was the first of an educational series which has been planned for the coming fall and winter.

Elisha Lee, federal manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad, gave to the members the benefit of his railroad experience along the line of railroading purely from an educational viewpoint. Discussions by other officials informed them of the geography of the railroad.

The Women's Club was established in July by 700 members but since that time has greatly increased in membership.

TANNER'S DEATH WITH WIFE

DESCRIBED AS HERO'S ACT

Decision Reached by Man to Die When He Found He Could Not Save Her Upheld in Letters to Evening Public Ledger

"Critic" and "A. V. Y." are sharing "M. M. M.'s" unpopularity in the discussion of the questions of love, heroism and duty presented in the case of William Tanner and his wife, Mrs. Woods. Like "M. M. M.," they expressed the opinion that Mr. Tanner was not a hero because he left three little children unprotected in the world, even though he stood at the side of his wife as a train struck down upon them and found that he could not save her from death.

Those who condemn "Critic," "A. V. Y." and "M. M. M." for their opinion of what is a man's duty, insist in letters to the Evening Public Ledger that Tanner's conduct was heroic and should inspire admiration and praise and not blame.

Some of the letters received follow: To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—I would just like to answer the man or woman that signed him or herself "Critic." Now "Critic" could have written a play that would entertain or be fort caught in the railroad track and, knowing that he or she was going to be killed, could you stand and do nothing? I don't blame Mr. Tanner a bit. Although it is true he ought to have thought of his children, who would be left in your care at a time like that?

READER, Danville, Va. To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—With your kind permission I wish to say a few words to "Critic." I certainly pity you, "Critic," if you are always finding fault with what people do because you will never have any friends.

It is easy enough to write what you said as nobody knows who you are; but I am willing to wager you wouldn't say it to any fair-minded person. To think that anybody would be so heartless as to criticize so brave an act is beyond me altogether.

Again, for your own sake, I hope you change your views. A CRITIC OF CRITIC. To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—I would like to answer the letter A. V. Y. had in your paper in regard to the heroic act of Mr. William Tanner. I really think he (A. V. Y.) lacks sound sense, because we all could think of many things to do after the act is done. We all know that such a sudden shock is liable to cause the best of us to lose our minds. No doubt A. V. Y. is one of those men that loves his wife dearly while in her presence, but loves some one else's wife when he is out.

My idea is that Mr. Tanner could not see his wife die and not help her. He could not bear to jump and be called a coward as A. V. Y. would say right away. I think Mr. Tanner showed a good spirit, one that is very scarce today. T. E. L.

To the Editor of the Evening Public Ledger: Sir—Regarding William Tanner, "A. V. Y." seems to give the most reasonable opinion I have seen. I'll bet that rap who says William Tanner was a coward wears a 12 1/2 collar and sells remnants in the center aisle when he isn't polishing his finger nails. It's usually that way.

Some say he was a fool, another that he lacked courage. Granted that his act was one of folly (on account of the children), who, if he thinks a moment, can say he lacked courage? Put yourself in his place. The one most dear to you is in Mr. Tanner's predicament and you are frantically trying to release her. The prosperous mass of the population straight at you, fairly braying destruction, would you say, "I'll stay with you, Mary." On your life, you would not! And neither would 99 per cent of the ordinary mortals. You would stay and help until the last moment and die, instinctively jump to safety. You wouldn't think of what you were going to do. You would do it. Self-respect.
