KENDRICK CONFERS
WITH SENATOR VARE

Meeting Had No Political Significance, Contractor Declares After Interview

MOORE LEAVES FOR REST

Political rumor was set buzzing today when Murdoch Kendrick, who was campaign manager for Mayor-elect Moore, entered the office of Senator Vare in the Lincoln Building.

The senator was "in" at the time, and a long conference resulted.

At the close of the interview Mr. Kendrick was asked if his visit had anything to do with the Moore cabinet or other questions relating to the next administration.

"The senator just wanted to talk with me, so he asked me over to his office," said Mr. Kendrick.

"There was no political significance whatever in Mr. Kendrick's call," said Senator Vare.

"Persons close to Congressman Moore today said the Mayor-elect had not decided upon one cabinet appointment so far.

The name of Lincoln Acker, independent contractor, the thirty-eight-year-old, still mentioned to head the Department of Public Works, Mr. Acker has many friends close to Congressman Moore, but his appointment, it is said, would be protested by the section of the Independent group which prevented the selection of Mr. Acker as the Town Meeting candidate for the mayor.

Mr. Moore is out of town today and even his friends are not certain of the place to which he has gone to seek rest and recuperation after his cabinet appointments. He will return to the city Monday.

It was learned the biggest question now confronting Mr. Moore is the selection of a man for director of public safety. Only negative information was available today on that subject. It was learned George W. Cole is not being considered for the directorship of public safety, though he is in line for the office of purchasing agent. Up to this time Mr. Moore has not conferred with Mr. Cole in regard to a place in the cabinet.

SHOPS DISPLAY UMBRELLAS
DARING IN COLOR AND DESIGN

Christmas Showing More Elaborate Than in Former Years. Combination of Beauty and Durability Aim of Makers

DARING in color and design are the umbrellas now on display in shops. They are more elaborate this season than ever.

An umbrella is something really indispensable. But because it is a necessity, designers have seen no reason to make them homely.

They are really very beautiful and cease to be a bore to carry because of it.

Stores are showing them with handles and ferrules of beautiful woods, metals and imitation ivory and tortoise.

Most of them bear some loop or ring by which they may be comfortably slipped over one's arm for convenience.

Several very swaggar ones are made after the English style. They are rather small and have a very short shaft. Usually they are trimmed with plaid leather, colored to match the shade of silk, and bear a leather loop attached to the side of the handle. They are neither too long or too short, and when hung upon the arm reach just a trifle below the knee.

In this manner an umbrella may be carried on threatening days by the shopper, who will find them of very little trouble.

Another style, very popular is the umbrella which has a hazy shade of blue. Sometimes it is bright red, relieved by a ring or two of ivory, and catches the brilliant silk of the umbrella; again it is yellow, presenting a smart contrast with the green silk; it may be a light amethyst shade to add a striking note to the deep purple; and again it might be an alluring shade of blue that corresponds with the sapphire of the silk.

There are also striking contrasts to be found in the black-and-white combinations. Where the handle and ferrule of one of these is black bone etched with white, or vice versa; the tips of the ribs are of imitation ivory. These against the black, whether the umbrella be opened or closed, are most effective.

Lewis later asserted that he had never authorized any such suits and explained that he had been annoyed by lawyers' "triumphs" while he was suffering great pain in the Jefferson Hospital shortly after the accident.

SUGAR PROBLEM
SOLUTION IS SEEN

John McCarthy, of Equalization Board, Predicts Benefit in Government's Action

MAY HIT MANY WORKERS

"Just the right thing. It places Attorney General Palmer where Mr. Hoover was. It should solve the whole question."

John A. McCarthy, representative of the sugar equalization board in Philadelphia, today so summarized the action of the President in turning over to the Department of Justice control and allocation of the country's sugar supply.

"The change of control," added Mr. McCarthy, "comes at an opportune time. December is the critical month in the sugar trade. The stock on hand is then always at its lowest. At present we have enough sugar here to last, under the restrictions established by the equalization board, nearly through next month."

"Now, with the Department of Justice in control, fixing the price for less than a figure which will enable the western growers to send their product of the eastern market to be disposed of at a price which would have been settled when our control ended at the first of the year, it will give us enough sugar to satisfy both industrial and household users through all of next month."

"I had information this action was to be taken by the government some time ago, but suppose the delay in announcing it was due to the press of more important measures in Washington which had to be cleared up first. The exact method of control, and had to be settled. There was some objection to licensing and other details, but now these appear to be cleared up."

Is Not Sugar Administrator

"The details of the plan are now in the hands of Mr. Palmer, and I suppose he will take the usual question with William A. Glasgow, Jr., who is our attorney. I am not sugar administrator as frequently has been stated. I represent the Refiners' Association in the equalization board in the matter of control of the output here."

Mr. Glasgow was not at his office today and no word from Washington, the sugar question had been received by him so far as his office assistants knew.

Among soft-drink manufacturers here whose sugar supply is likely to be curtailed under government control, it was said today that few of them are large users of sugar, particularly at this time of year.

Says Candy Not Affected

The increase in the cost of sugar will not affect the price of candy to any great extent, according to Miss J. C. Montague, of Montague & Co., which conducts a large number of stores in Philadelphia.

A representative of a Chestnut street candy firm said that if the price of sugar is not fixed for a definite period it will cause serious loss to many industries.

On account of the uncertainty, he said, candy manufacturers have laid off 50 per cent of their force.

Box manufacturers have also been compelled to curtail their working force, which have thrown several thousand people out of work throughout the country.

Dealers will suffer great loss, he declared, if the sugar question is not improved quickly as preparation for the holiday season must be made long before the actual work of making it begins.

BURTON HOLMES IN FRANCE
Second Travelogue Describes Historic Battlegrounds

Burton Holmes took all of Philadelphia's citizenry that could pack into the Academy of Music last night on an edifying and inspiring trip through the battlefields of France. It was an edifying tour because there was scarcely an angle of the great war which his tasteful photos and movies did not image, and it was an inspiring tour because with admirable art he kept before his audience that high purpose which could transform ordinary people of the world into heroes and willing martyrs.

Rulua, Germany, mud waters which once were used for medicinal purposes, and France, and a thousand and one other things, were crowded into the rich two hours of the lecture.

Burton Holmes will give "Alaace-Lorraine" at the Academy on Friday evening and Saturday matinee of the coming week.

Physician's Daughter Kisses Mother Good-Night and Starts for Bed

A few minutes after she had kissed her mother good-night, Margaret Heikman, twenty-two years old, 617 South Forty-eighth street, dropped dead shortly before midnight at her home.

Miss Heikman was in a cheerful mood a few minutes before her death. She returned from a bridge party late in the evening and on reaching home carried a magazine to her room to read.

She had barely reached the second floor when she fell.

Her father, Dr. H. B. Hickman, found her unconscious and summoned Dr. M. W. Sloan, of 4825 Baltimore avenue. Both physicians tried to revive the girl, but their efforts were futile. Her death is believed to have been due to heart disease.

The body was ordered taken to the morgue by Coroner Beasley and was there identified by a son-in-law, J. Walter Fox, who resides at 1822 Chestnut street in North Village, N. J., where there is a small artists' colony.
