By HAZEL DEVO BATCHELOR Copyright, 1914, by Public Ledger Co.

SYNOPSIS

At boarding school Virginia West becomes friends with Kathleen Foster, but their friendship is interrupted by Virginia leaving school. Mrs. West, terrified by the idea that Virginia will marry a college man, Jimmy Anderson, with whom she has fallen in love, takes her daughter out of school and up to a fashionable summer resort, where they meet Sherman Holmes, a man of enormous wealth. Mrs. West instantly schemes for a possible match.

SHERMAN HOLMES had decided to ask Virginia to marry him. Some-what bored with life, he had thought that any new thrill would be an impossibility; but Virginia had changed all that. To have this girl for his wife to see life again through her eyes, to have those marvelous possibilities in her nature gradually unfold and develop for his slow education seemed the most desirable thing in the world. He liked her simplicity, her lack of worldliness and wondered that this could be so when her mother was so entirely different.

When he asked Virginia to marry him he was not surprised that she started and shrunk away. He had expected this, but he did not dream that it was because of aversion, he thought it due to her inexperience.

He had taken her for a drive in his high-powered car, and she sat beside him muffled up in a big coat with a wrap of pale blue fur. The stars in her eyes, he had stopped the car on a hill so that they might watch the moon climb up, and then quite suddenly, he had leaned close to her with his voice shaking a little, had whispered: "You darling!"

There was wonder in the eyes she turned to him. And then when he had caught her by the neck and they were turned to him he quite lost his head and kissed her roughly again and again.

She gasped and tried to beat him off with her fists. When he finally released her she was shuddering away in a corner of the seat, horror in every line of her face.

"Dearest," he said imploringly, furious with himself for losing control and frightening her this way. "I'm sorry, but you look like a white wraith in this moonlight. You know I love you, don't you? I want you to marry me."

Virginia was sick with self-loathing. Sherman Holmes's kisses burned on her lips, she felt degraded, and she hated the man who had done this to her. But more, much more than she hated him, she hated herself. If she hadn't been so blind she might have known that something of this kind would happen.

"Take me home please," she said faintly, after a moment's silence. He was conscience-stricken and afraid that he had spoiled his chances. In silence he started the car and they moved forward. Virginia sat with her face huddled down in the collar of her coat and with her eyes fixed straight ahead on the white ribbon of the road. He did not speak to her until they were almost at the hotel, then he slowed down the engine.

"Virginia," she did not answer. "Virginia, I want you to listen to me. I had no right to do what I did and I'm sorry for it. Please lift up your eyes."

She did turn to him then. "I want to ask you a question," he said gently. "Do you think you could ever care for me that way I mean?" She shook her head. "No."

"You're quite sure?" "Quite." Her voice was low, almost a whisper. He said nothing more and they drove up before the low red verandas. Mrs. West came to meet them and she looked at Virginia keenly. The girl held her head down, however, and in the dim light it was impossible to discern any way that Virginia escaped detection until after the good-nights had been said. Once upstairs Mrs. West took Virginia by the shoulders and looked searchingly into the girl's face.

"Have you anything to tell me?" She knew, however, before the question was asked that there was no hope. Virginia's eyes were smoldering with anger and big hurt tears suddenly brimmed over the lids and fell down in great drops on the blue chiffon of her dress.

"You've turned down Sherman Holmes when you had the chance to marry him. It's the truth, isn't it?" She did not speak for Virginia to answer, but hurried on. "What would you say if I told you we were poor, she flung at the frightened girl. "Would you be wiser, wonder, or wouldn't you care?"

CAMEL'S HAIR MAKES IT WARM AND PRETTY

This is one of the most popular cuts and materials for top coats this winter. The color is a becoming tan. The hat worn with this is of brown leather, with a band of ribbon as trimming.

A Daily Fashion Talk by Florence Rose CAMEL'S hair is the fabric of fabrics for the new top coat. At the smart resorts where you will find the advance guard of next spring's fashions you will see a striking number of coats of this material, and worn to such good effect that you will realize that for smartness camel's hair is a formidable rival to leather for the general utility, warm coat.

Camel's hair is never an inexpensive material, and this season it is as high priced as the general rise in all fabric prices would lead you to imagine.

For my own part I would regard the sort of camel's hair coat that is shown in today's sketch as a good investment. It shows the conventional long, straight lines, but there are originality and distinction in the shoulder cut and the design of the collar.

Doubtless the best shade for this type of coat is one of the lighter shades of tan, a shade appropriate because it is the color that one might suppose a nice young camel would be—not the poor miserable specimens that we see lumping their way through a circus performance, for they are very drab, dusty animals indeed, but a nice warm light brown that one would suppose was the natural color of a well-groomed camel.

And the hat to go with this coat. Yes, it is another leather hat and you may have become a little weary of this trouble came from catarrh, why don't you go to a nose and throat specialist? He could either do something to relieve you or send you to the proper kind of doctor. Since your head was better when you had the nosebleeds it may be that there is too much blood in your head. Holding cool water or ice on your forehead might help. I cannot recommend any one doctor, but I certainly advise you to see a specialist and find out what can be done to relieve you.
