Nancy Wynne Talks of the Taylors' Dance and the Benedicks' Ball Tonight—She Speaks of the Death of Mrs. Claxton

WELL, did you have a happy day? I'm sure you did. Even if the memories of other Christmas made the lump come in the throat. You were happy, because, with the real spirit of Christmas, you strove to make others happy, and that's what counts, isn't it?

There were a number of parties last evening. The Bestram Lippincotts gave a dinner-dance at their home, 1712 Shore street, before the evening began. That is, early in the evening—they had a children's party for the wee Lippincotts, children of the Joseph W. Lippincotts, the wife of Hills and the wee Biddles, children of the William Beck O'Neills and the Nicholas Biddles, all grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Lippincott.

Isn't it fine to hear that Mrs. Lippincott is well again and able to go about once more? She did have such a terrible illness; so serious and tedious. Now she is really well again, and has even been to the opera in the evening, though she has not yet taken in big balls. One has to be careful after an illness like that. It was typhoid, you know, and in general, Mrs. Lippincott is well again. It is of interest to note that Mr. Wilbur has lived most of his life in the city of Philadelphia, and which acted as escort to King Albert of Belgium on his trips to the front.

The Haverford brought 806 passengers to this country, two of them stowaways, Julius Caesar, one of the youths who booked his own secret passage, was released yesterday after he proved his American citizenship, but William Friedwall is being held for further guarantee; bride was among the passengers and embraced her sweetheart as the officials turned their backs. Jennie Sewell, twenty-two years old, arrived from Great Britain and was met at the pier by Arnold Field, twenty-six, 73 Rochester street, Westbrook, Me. According to the officials who have on single eye for romances, the couple met in England and were engaged before Field returned home. The greeting at the pier was enthusiastic.
