Nancy Wynne Tells of the Alewra-Norris Wedding. She Describes the Bride's Gown—She Hears More of Miss Latta's Concert at Devon

IF ANY ONE ever tells me before a wedding again that a bride like Dorothy Norris is going to be married in the conventional satin, lace and tulle, I will wait until after I have seen said wedding garment as I did on Saturday, before stating such was going to wear for Dorothy said she was going to wear a Turkish trowsers suit.

But her headress was even more strange. It was a sort of silken wool strand, fringed with what was fitted tight and pointed forward and head, the fringe around the forehead and down the sides falling over the ears. Her hair was unadorned over the crown. Her hair was unadorned over the crown.

All I have to say is it was the strangest kind of wedding dress and wedding headgear ever seen on an American girl. Perhaps it's the way Dorothy looked well, but the dress was so bizarre I forget to look at her much.

I suppose I am hopelessly old-fashioned, but I just don't like things that are queer, unless they are pretty. Give me beauty every time, and this was just strange. She carried a bouquet of white flowers, and the waist was a broad, in shape and had no sleeves.

Lieutenant Alewra was in his uniform, and he rather nice looking and his bride, to have no eyes for anyone but his bride, to have no eyes for anyone but his bride.

THE concert which Elizabeth Latta is getting up for the Federation of Music Clubs under the Matinee Musical Club's auspices, to be given outdoors at Devon Inn on Thursday evening, you know very interesting to me, and you know young Robert Armstrong is to play and he is some "wiz" when it comes to piano.

Do you remember the Biddle concert and Elizabeth Latta both had their debut into the music world? I remember they were the youngest performers there, and they were so young and seemed to love their art so much.

THE Edward Heckschers have sent out cards for a party for Virginia Heckscher on October 9. A dinner-dance it will be. You know there are two Heckscher sisters. They are the children of cousins, as Mr. Stevens Heckscher and Mr. Ledyard Heckscher are cousins. Lauretta Heckscher is Mrs. Stevens Heckscher, is to have a party given for her on September 17 by Mrs. H. Benedicta will give a dance in her honor on September 20.

IT SEEMS to me there are a great many Main Line debutantes this year. Virginia Carter, two Heckschers, Gladys Hopkins, who is Rita Heckscher's step-sister; Ruth Packard, Jane Cox, Jane Hepburn and ever so many others, whose names do not come to me as I write. It will be a busy year, but I doubt if it will be as strenuous as last year.

JACK and Jean, aged five and four, were very fond of visiting Mrs. Heckscher down at the farm house on their country place, and very often if Mrs. H. knew they were coming she'd make it convenient to be baking cake and making beautiful icings, or perhaps they'd be taffy holding on the stove. Then the great thing, be it icing or candy, would, of course, be to scrape the pot with spoons. One day they arrived and found the pot very hot. As they were getting toward the end Jack suddenly remarked, "Well, I think we'd better go now. And after some five minutes later Jack appeared at Mrs. H.'s door. "Well," said he, "did you save it for me?" "Save what, dearie?" "The pan. Didn't you?"

That First Cool Day!

A NORTH wind, an overcast sky, and before you know it you're turning from your organdies and chiffons to cast a speculative eye on the early autumn suits.

And this suit from Vionnet; simple, but so entirely in the mode, informal, but in such perfect taste, is only one of the many models through which Vogue accurately forecasts the Autumn fashions.

Do you know how skillfully the French milliners are using ribbons this season? Is there to be one favorite color? Or a dozen? Are the feathers to curl under the chin or dangle down the back? Or stick up in a question mark behind? If you'd know, see the Fionnet gives a tulleur of grey homespun cheviot lines of almost sports-like informality. It is worn over a grey crepe-knit silk blouse of equal simplicity, but distinguished by an embroidered monogram in taupe silk and by hand-hermstitching. This Tabot hat with its shimmering plumes is in the vanguard of the many odds—and smartly-feathered hats of the new season.

Autumn Forecast and Millinery number of VOGUE

Besides defining the trend of the Autumn mode in its progress toward a final form, and doing it first and earliest as usual, Vogue shows over 80 hats from every important house in Paris and New York. Hats of velvet, satin, duvetine, fur and feathers. Gay hats. Smart hats. Intellectual hats. But always—hats that have received the approval of Paris and the fashion editors of Vogue.
