

P. R. T. IS WILLING TO RUN ITS CARS DIRECT TO CAMDEN

Adoption of Transit Company's Offer Would Mean End of Shuttle Train Proposal

ROAD READY TO CONFER WITH JERSEY SERVICE CO.

The Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. is willing to direct trolley lines over the Delaware River bridge, between Philadelphia and Camden, thus eliminating the need for shuttle trains. This was indicated today by Raymond T. Tyson, chief engineer of the company, speaking for the P. R. T.

Mr. Tyson said the company had followed every plan made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and would be ready when the time came to enter into conference with the Public Service Co. of New Jersey, to arrange through the Interstate Commerce Commission, as such a trolley line would be doing an interstate business.

No Objection to Plan
Mr. Tyson said that officials of the company had been keeping fully abreast of the plans for the bridge engineers. The P. R. T. lost no time in taking up the question of direct trolley communication between this city and Camden. The company's engineers already have scrutinized carefully the plans made by the Bridge Commission's engineers, and no objection has developed to the project for direct trolley service.

Richard Weglein, president of Council and newly appointed member of the Bridge Commission, is another advocate of direct trolley service between Philadelphia and Camden. He will use his influence as a member of the commission to bring this about.

"Besides this through service, of course, there should be provision also for those riders who may want merely to cross the bridge. The great project which we are all so anxious to see brought to completion must be made to serve the needs of the two cities in every way possible."

The engineers who planned the bridge are unanimous in the opinion that a direct trolley service would have many advantages over a shuttle system, which would necessitate changing cars at both ends of the bridge.

Provision For All
"Besides this through service, of course, there should be provision also for those riders who may want merely to cross the bridge. The great project which we are all so anxious to see brought to completion must be made to serve the needs of the two cities in every way possible."

The board's report stated: "We have considered that shuttle-train service should be discontinued at the time the bridge is opened."

Such a service, however, would mean great delay and inconvenience for passengers. In drawing up their plans for the bridge, the engineers considered either direct or shuttle service.

As a means of keeping the Sixth street trolley bridge clear of trolley tracks, the engineers considered the direct trolley service, which would be operated on a two-track subway from the south end of Race street.

This would leave Sixth street free from tracks in front of the bridge plaza and would tend to prevent congestion of trolley cars.

It would also allow direct connection between Philadelphia surface cars and the bridge lines, if such an arrangement were desired.

Plan Public Hearings
The first of three public hearings will be held Monday by the Bridge Commission for a thorough ventilation of views on the location of the bridge.

The Philadelphia Board of Engineers, which recommended the bridge, will be held at the opening meeting in Mayor Moore's reception room, City Hall.

The Washington Square location will be the subject of the public hearing next Wednesday and the Spring Garden street location will be discussed at the final hearing Friday.

CLEAN CITY HALL CLOCK

Steeplejacks Make Market Street Pedestrians Shiver
Steeplejacks began work this morning on the dizzy job of washing the four faces of the clock on City Hall. As they swayed from side to side on unstable swings, several hundred feet in the air, hundreds of persons paused in their work, craned their necks, and shivered.

The four dials of the clock, which are twenty-six feet in diameter, have not been cleaned for eight years, and are covered by a hard crust of soot and dirt. Avoid being used to clean the dials, the cleaners started work on the east dial, which is held in place by a charge of Nathan Randol, foreman of the City Hall cleaners.

FEW "HOT DOGS" AT CONEY

Visitors May Go Hungry Through Strike of Sausage Stuffers
New York, June 11.—(By A. P.)—Coney Island today faced hungry troubles that may cause the thousands that flock to the great playground to go hungry during their visit.

The supply of hot dogs at Coney Island was said to be sufficient for only one day's consumption.

Wages have been offered, but ex-changers who disperse red linnens, however, said their supplies were inexhaustible and expressed the belief that they would be able to take care of the hungry visitors.

BURGLAR ESCAPES AFTER GUN BATTLE

Druggist, Hearing Tap-Tap of Intruder's Chisel on Door, Calls Police

FUGITIVE THOUGHT HURT

After a revolver battle with two patrolmen during which many shots were exchanged, a burglar, who attempted to rob the drug store of Albert Mechem, 3740 Lancaster avenue, escaped early this morning. He is believed to have been wounded and a search is being made of all city hospitals.

The man attempted to force an entrance through a rear door. He used a chisel, a hammer and an auger which were found after he was forced to give up the job.

Mechem was aroused by a peculiar tapping on the door. He noticed the tapping grew louder whenever a trolley car passed, showing the would-be burglar was under the impression that the grinding car wheels drowned the noise of his operations.

Sees Intruder

Creeping cautiously to the window, Mechem saw the burglar, a Negro, boring a hole in the door. He waited until the man started his pounding operations, then he telephoned to the police of the thirty-ninth street and Lancaster avenue station.

"A burglar is trying to break into my place," said Mechem. "If you come quietly, you can get him." The druggist then returned and watched the intruder who went industriously about his task.

Patrolmen Arrive

A moment later Patrolmen Edlham and Finnigan appeared around the corner of the building with revolvers ready for action.

The weapon of the waiting burglar spoke first. The two patrolmen were compelled to dodge in a doorway. As the man backed away they went after him.

"Throw up your hands," ordered Finnigan. "It's all up." Two shots from the man's revolver were his reply. Edlham replied with two more.

Scores of persons ran to windows, but dodged back quickly again when they saw the faces of the patrolmen.

The would-be burglar turned and ran down Lancaster avenue. The patrolmen kept after him, shooting as they went. He was shot in the back and started into an alley. On reaching there the police lost track of him. As he disappeared into the alley, he staggered slightly, and it is believed one of the last shots fired at him took effect.

Young Wife Has to Have Physician After Encounter With Simian

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Greenwood, of Roosevelt boulevard, finally got away on their honeymoon, but not before they had made one false start, with some being severely scratched by a neighbor's pet monkey in trying to get her own trousseau.

It was one of those practical joking jokes of the bride's friends which resulted in a day's delay in their start last Saturday on a honeymoon in Atlantic City, and in the summoning of a physician to cure the bride's wounds caused by the monkey's scratches.

Here's the way it happened, as the facts were told today: Miss Edith Moore, nineteen years old, and of an attractiveness that made her stand out like Mary Pickford in the picturesque surroundings of a June wedding, was Friday night of last week to Charles Greenwood, at the

NEW YORK BANKERS WILL AID FARMERS

Morgan Agrees That Half of Big Loan Be Floated in His City

FIFTY MILLIONS INVOLVED

By CLINTON W. GILBERT
Staff Correspondent Evening Public Ledger
Washington, June 11.—J. P. Morgan, in conference yesterday with Secretary Mellon and later with President Harding, agreed that New York should take about half the farm paper necessary to relieve the acute financial situation in the agricultural West.

The Government at first proposed to form a special corporation to advance $50,000,000 of United States funds for the relief of the farmers, but the bankers, out of the following in order of priority: This development will bring into Wall Street a kind of paper which is not Street perhaps has never seen. More important politically it will give the West a kindlier feeling toward Wall Street. Already you have Western Senators saying that "Morgan is a pretty good fellow in spite of everything."

Political Consequences Seen
If the step agreed upon yesterday establishes a precedent, not only will considerable political consequences follow, but the farming and agricultural will be on a sounder basis.

Farm paper is long-term paper, especially cattle paper, which has to run two or three years. Western bankers carry this paper, but naturally because it is not a quick enough asset can take only a limited quantity. If Eastern banks can be induced to take a share of it, it will be a great relief to the Western banks which know its quality, sufficient money will be available for farming, which has grown to be a very serious, precisely like Eastern industry, with vast credit requirements.

The present crisis in the West is due to the fact that there has been no adequate credit machinery for the farmers.

This is the first great step in cooperation between banking and the Administration. The same is suggested on the part of the international bankers generally to discuss their proposed loans abroad with the Administration before they are made.

The three issues in the party say they were only chance acquaintances and were out for a lark.

She only knew when she was the owner of the car, and that he and his companions were well supplied with money which they spent lavishly.

The witnesses who are confined in the city are attending the progress of the probe, are:

The witnesses who are confined in the city are attending the progress of the probe, are:

Miss Alice Dorr, twenty-two years old, clerk, whose home is 344 West 110th street, New York.

George Sylvester Vincent, Wallingford, twenty-five years old, banker, residing at 429 East 111th street, New York, who gave another address as 787 Seventh avenue, New York.

Cornelius Murphy, twenty-four years old, salesman, of 114 West 109th street, New York, who was residing at 12 South Avenue, Hamden, Conn., in front of which the tragedy was enacted.

The witnesses told conflicting stories which the detectives now engaged in unravelling the mystery of the shooting are trying to separate in order to ascertain the true facts.

Misses Alice Dorr and Anne Johnson, who were in the car at the time of the shooting, accompanied the wounded man to the City Hospital, where they were taken into custody.

Stage Hands Assert They Have Made No Demands
New York, June 11.—Representatives of managers, actors and stage hands seen agreed that the reported danger of darkened theatres generally in the fall is not a probability.

This time it is the stage hand who is credited with beginning another theatre war. The report had it that the demands of the stage hands for an increase in wages had caused the Hippodrome management to shut down on new productions and to entertain plans for converting the theatre into a moving-picture palace.

Contracts of the stage hands with the "Producing Managers' Association" expire September 1. The Hippodrome management says that the men demanded $1.25. Sam Harris, for the moment, says the stage hands demanded a 20 per cent increase.

But Harry Bingham, business manager of the local stage hands' union, insisted yesterday that no demands had been made and statements to the contrary were "the managers' game to scare some of our members."
