

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

Perky Squirrel's Riddles
By DADDY

This week Jack and Janet are taught a queer new game by Perky Squirrel.

CHAPTER I
Perky's Busy Day

Jack and Janet were hiding in the big woods. They kept as quiet as mice and yet their eyes and hands were very busy. Their eyes were following Perky Squirrel as he darted hither and thither among the branches of the trees. Their hands were drawing funny pictures of Perky.

They were watching him. Perky did many comical things. He wriggled his nose like a monkey as he lunched on acorns. He made queer faces as he scolded Blue Jay for teasing him. He hid himself in nervous fright when he saw his own shadow.

Perky Squirrel, in addition to doing these comical things was searching for acorns and nuts and carrying them to a hole in a hollow tree.

"I wonder why Perky Squirrel is so busy," whispered Jack, as they grew tired of drawing the nimble little creature.

"Let's ask him," said Jack, stepping out within view of Perky Squirrel. But the instant Jack came into sight, Perky Squirrel flashed out of sight.

Jack called to Perky Squirrel, trying to coax him to stop. But Perky Squirrel kept snugly hidden.

"Perhaps he doesn't understand what you say," said Janet to Jack. "If we had some way of talking with him in animal language."

"Let's go to sleep and get some sleep magic," whispered Jack.

And that is what the two of them did. They lay on the mossy ground and closed their eyes. Then, of a sudden, something woke them up. It was a hickory nut that fell squarely on Jack's nose, and bounded from there to Janet's cheek.

The children's eyes popped open in time to see Perky Squirrel grinning at them from a branch above. He was who had dropped the nut. At the instant Perky Squirrel saw they were awake he whisked out of sight again.

"Come back," Perky Squirrel. "We want to be friends with you," cried Jack.

Perky Squirrel gave no sign that he heard. Jack and Janet kept on coaxing, and finally they saw Perky pecking at them around a branch.

"How did you learn animal talk?" he asked.

"Through sleep magic," replied Janet.

"Ek! Ek! Ek! If you learned it through sleep magic, I guess I don't need to be afraid of you," said Perky Squirrel. At once he became friendly with them.

"Why are you so busy?" Janet asked him.

"Ek! Ek! Ek! I'll tell you a riddle and if you guess it that will give you the answer to your question," giggled Perky Squirrel. "Here is the riddle: Flying it is gray; falling it is white, running away it is black. What is it?"

Jack and Janet put their wits to work on it. Perky Squirrel giggled and chuckled as he repeated the riddle: "Flying it is gray; falling it is white; running away it is black. What is it?"

That riddle certainly was a puzzle. Jack and Janet tried their wits to work on it. Perky Squirrel giggled and chuckled as he repeated the riddle: "Flying it is gray; falling it is white; running away it is black. What is it?"

running away it is black. What is it? And the answer will tell you why Perky Squirrel is so busy."

Jack, as he worked his wits, turned his eyes toward the sky. There he saw a gray cloud.

"That looks like a storm," thought Jack. Then Jack happened to look down. He saw a dark little stream gurgling through the leaves. As he saw it, he gave a shout. "I know! I know! It is snow! It is snow! Gray when it is flying in the clouds, white when it is falling in flakes, black when it melts into water and runs away."

Perky Squirrel chuckled. That was the right answer. "But I don't see how the answer tells why you are so busy," Jack added.

"I do," cried Janet. "Snow means winter is coming and Perky Squirrel is getting ready for winter!"

"True! True!" said Perky Squirrel. (Tomorrow will be told how Perky Squirrel puts another riddle to them—a riddle that has a very funny answer.)
