

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

"The Four Nuts" by DADDY

Jack and Janet meet a little old woman in the woods. She proves to be Dame Instinct, forty years old, who has been waiting for them since they were children. They find her sitting on a log, looking at a book. She tells them that she has been waiting for them since they were children. They find her sitting on a log, looking at a book. She tells them that she has been waiting for them since they were children.

CHAPTER I Dame Instinct's Trick

Jack and Janet were speeding through the woods with Dame Instinct in her wheelless auto. This wheelless auto was nothing like a large basket which, through magic used by Dame Instinct, flew like a leaf borne along by the gusts of an autumn gale.

The three were seeking a summer bird which was singing a spring song in the white forest—singing at a time when the bird should be far away in the South and safe from the icy blizzards of Old Man Winter—soon would be bringing from Santa Claus land.

Suddenly the song of the mysterious bird sounded again. It seemed very clear at hand.

"Who?" cried Dame Instinct to the wheelless auto. "Who?"

As once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves, Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

song ceased abruptly, and when the children got around the bushes no bird was in sight. They heard a sly little chuckle, as if some one was laughing over their fooling them, but they couldn't tell where the chuckle came from. They saw only drifts of fallen leaves on the ground and foot-prints leading away.

"Humph!" said Dame Instinct, looking around. "That mysterious singer is a quick rider, but we will show him we are as tricky as he is. Come with me and make all the noise you can."

Dame Instinct led them swishing noisily through the dead leaves. When they were out of earshot of the singer, she put her finger to her lips for silence.

"Now, be very quiet," she whispered. "Walk on your toes and watch every step you take."

Dame Instinct began to crouch back. At once Jack and Janet knew what her plan was. She had made a lot of noise, so the singer would think the three had gone away, and now she was creeping to creep upon him from another direction. Jack and Janet liked this idea, and tiptoed after her as quietly as they could.

They crept on until they came to where they had left the wheelless auto. Here Dame Instinct warned them with uplifted finger and they stopped to listen. And sure enough, as they listened, they could hear an odd, quaint, chuckling sound, followed by a rustling among the fallen leaves. Dame Instinct smiled.

"Now we will find who the mysterious singer is," she whispered, creeping forward to peek around the bushes.

At once the wheelless auto came to a stop, landing softly in a bed of fallen leaves. Dame Instinct hopped briskly out, followed by Jack and Janet.

The song of the bird came from the other side of some low bushes. Jack and Janet dashed around the bushes to catch the mysterious singer. But, their feet made a noise in the fallen leaves, telling the singer they were coming. The

NEW EASTON HEIRS APPEAR
Claimants Seek Share of $250,000 Estate Left by Widow
New York, Nov. 28.—New claimants today came forward to seek shares in the $250,000 estate of Mrs. Margaret Easton, widow of James M. Easton, who was found dead in her Brooklyn home recently after having lived in seeming poverty for several years.
Miss Dorothy E. Wicks, a nurse, and her sisters, Eleanor S. and Harriet Miller Wicks, of West Orange, N. J., declared in a petition filed in the Surrogate's Court they were grand nieces of Mr. Easton and as next of kin the lawful heirs.
Nothing has yet been done toward probating the will, written in pencil, that was received by the Surrogate Friday by mail, naming Josephine Johnson, a daughter of Mr. Easton, as

Quality Specials
Shoulders of Lamb 20c Per lb.
Thick End of Rib 18c Per lb.
Legs of Lamb 32c Per lb.
Rump and Round Steak 25c Per lb.
Bradley's Prices Have Been Reduced But not the Quality

Bradley's Market and 21st Streets
Our New Location at Nos. 2106-2108

The Question
Is General Motors discontinuing the Oakland?
The Answer:
OAKLAND MODELS STAND.
President du Pont Says Changes May Be Made After 1922.
P. S. du Pont, President of the General Motors Corporation, has denied that the company was contemplating any change in the Oakland models in the immediate future. In a statement issued last night, Mr. du Pont says that "it is but natural that there should have been constant gossip during the past few weeks while automobile price reductions were under way. The policies of the General Motors Corporation with respect to certain of its manufacturing units were not immune, the future of Oakland being the subject of persistent rumors."
"This division is in a healthy condition, with its business stabilized and sales increasing. The present line of passenger cars, with general improvements will be continued for the 1922 selling season. Thereafter, new models as may be required by the trade may be introduced."
—New York Times, Sat., Nov. 19, 1921.

OAKLAND MOTOR COMPANY
GENERAL OFFICES AND SALES ROOMS
911 North Broad Street
Service plant 21st & Nevada Sts. (1/2 mi. south of Dauphin)
PHONE: POPULAR 40

Curry's for Gifts
Will Solve the Problem "What Shall I Give This Christmas?"
Ladies' Hand Bags, Vanity Cases, Fitted Overnight Bags, Fitted Suitcases, Travel Bags, Travel Slippers, Jewel Boxes, Cigar Boxes, Travel Toilet Sets, Manicure Sets, Cigar and Cigarette Cases, Wallets, Brief Cases, etc., Eversharp Pencils, Fountain Pens, Desk Sets, Desk Calendars, Calendars, Five Stationery, Address Books, etc., Book Ends, License B-reers, Cardsticks, Boudoir Lamps, Covers for Children and Crayons, Photo Albums, Camera Cases, Camera Accessories, An Enlargement From Your Favorite Print, Framed Mattoes, Framed Pictures

Xmas Greeting Cards
Illustrated Booklet Mailed Upon Request
Philadelphia's Popular Gift Shop
F. J. CURRY
812 Chestnut St. 812

Electric Lamps for Xmas Gifts
A lamp is a perfect gift. Decorative by day—by night its soft kindly light is not alone necessary, but lends new