

WIN EUROPEAN TRIP
 One Philadelphia is Awarded Course of Study Abroad by College
THREE OTHERS RANK HIGH

The annual announcement of Europe following awards made by the graduating class at Bryn Mawr College was made following chapel services today, by M. Corie Thomas, president. A Philadelphia girl was one of the recipients. The list follows: The M. Corie Thomas European Fellowship, value $500, to Grace Levin; The Mary Elizabeth Garrett Fellowship, value $500, to Helen Francis Wood, of South Hadley Hall, Mass.; the Helen and Cecil Ebel Foundation Scholarship, worth $1500, to Edith Marion Smith, of Portano, Ill.; and the Senior Class European Fellowship, of $500, to Sylvia Thurston, 6235 Webster street, Philadelphia. Miss Thurston, the Philadelphia winner, is the daughter of William H. Thurston. She prepared at the West Philadelphia High School for Girls. There are thirty-one members of the senior class, the graduation exercises to take place in June. Among the ten highest girls in the class were the following Philadelphiaans: Miss Thurston, Isabel Anne King, of North Grant street, who prepared at the Germantown High School, and Eleanor Gabel, 6230 North Thirteenth street. The others are Gertrude Protosch, Fern Mayr, of West Philadelphia, New York City; Margaret Dulley Spear, Englewood, N. J.; Olive Beatrice Floyd, South Lancaster, Mass.; Olive Anna Haggerty, Fall River, Mass.; C. Kirkham Garrison, New York; and Margaret Crosby, Minneapolis.

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES
 BY AMERUS W. STACE
The Magic Fairy Cap

Jack and Janet rescue Prince Fitter-Flash, a fairy, from a snake and a giant spider. As a reward they get a magic fairy cap which enables them to do things differently from before. A terrifying night meets their gaze.

CHAPTER V
 Eyes That See Differently
 THE Black Dragon was before the astonished eyes of Jack and Janet! The Black Dragon, about which the birds had been shrieking! The Black Dragon they had expected to meet when they went to the rescue of Prince Fitter-Flash, son of the Fairy King.

They saw first the head of the monster, his ugly mouth open, his forked tongue sticking out, his glassy eyes staring at them. Then they saw his body sprawling back among the flowers in great loops—a body that seemed longer than the longest telephone pole they had ever seen.

Jack and Janet felt themselves almost frozen with horror. They felt as if caught in a trap. How could they escape!

Above them hovered Prince Fitter-Flash, the fairy, they had rescued from the snake and the giant spider. Fitter-Flash didn't seem a bit disturbed by the sight of the Black Dragon. He was, however, looking anxiously at something behind Jack and Janet.

"Beware the Hairy Ogre!" he warned in his tinkling voice. "Keep clear of his trap."

Jack and Janet glanced around. Above them was stretched a great net. In a corner of the net squatted the Hairy Ogre—a many-legged beast with a bulging body and a human head. The Ogre was waving them with wicked eyes. Suddenly he darted toward them. As they shrank back, the Ogre buried a line at them—like a cowboy throws a lasso. The line hit Janet and seemed to cling to her. Jack seized it and tore it in two.

They turned to flee—and there was the Black Dragon still staring at them from his glassy eyes.

"Fly!" cried Prince Fitter-Flash. "Fly up here to safety!"

Flying did seem the only way to escape. But how could children fly? Even as this thought flashed into the heads of Jack and Janet they felt themselves rising into the air. At their shoulders was a queer fluttering.

They looked at each other and each saw an amazing sight. Jack saw that Janet had grown wings and Janet saw that Jack had grown wings. These wings were carrying them upward toward the fairy king's magic stage to say, they were the same size as the tiny Prince. No wonder the bluebell cap had fitted them so snugly.

"I'm glad to see you get away from that awful Black Dragon," gasped Jack. "And I'm glad to escape that horrible Hairy Ogre," cried Janet. Prince Fitter-Flash smiled at them. "Now you know how I felt when I saw the Dragon and when Janet rescued me from the trap of the Hairy Ogre."

These words made Jack and Janet look down again at the dragon and the ogre. Yes, the Black Dragon was none other than the snake Jack had fought and the Hairy Ogre was the giant spider from which Janet had snatched the Fairy Prince.

Before they had been looking at snake and spider with human eyes; now they looked at them with eagle eyes opened by the magic fairy cap.

"Do you wonder that I am grateful to you?" you thought Prince Fitter-Flash. "You have earned the right to wear the magic fairy cap, and to enter Fairyland."

"Where is Fairyland?" asked Janet. "Is it far away?" "Look about you," tinkled the fairy prince. "Look about you and you will see Fairyland."
