

Chic New Styles on Showing Here

Great Falls Shops Have Late Models

"Go forth," said the powers that reign at The Tribune one day early last week to one of the reporters; "visit every store in Great Falls where Easter finery for women and girls is being shown, and come back and write what you have seen that the readers of our paper may know what kind of garments are to be had in the stores and shops of this city and for what prices."

The reporter went gladly forth, armed with the implements of her trade, a pad and pencil. For two days she had a wonderful time. She visited every store in the city where Easter finery for women and girls was shown, and because she was a woman, revelled in the beauty that was displayed for her benefit. She had one glorious advantage over the average woman or girl with the limited pocketbook who goes shopping; she was treated in every store as though she had a million dollars to spend right there, and yet was never embarrassed with having to choose one garment out of so many lovely things, or having to pretend that she hadn't found just what she wanted in order to conceal the fact that she couldn't buy, but was "just looking."

Prices Down; Styles Many.

At the end of the second day of her rambles she returned to her typewriter, her mind a blur of all sorts of wonderful garments. She had to describe to you a single garment she had seen, fortunately she had extensive notes.

This much only she knew. Prices had come down, and styles were most accommodating. There was such a variety of fashionable models, all equally good. There have been seasons when everything was planned for rather tall perfect "thirty-sixes"—when either very fancy or very tailored suits were the vogue, when one must either wear one or the other, regardless of curves or lack of curves in her person, or be a fashion outcast. Not so this year. If you are short and plump, you will find the designers had you in mind, and contrived models that will make you look tall and more slim. Are you large and portly? Well, they have taken thought of you, too, and made suits that will give you really girlish lines. Are you very thin? Well, there are the bouffant effects that you can wear to wonderful advantage. There is a quaintness and dainty femininity about the dresses that will make every woman who wears them look most charming. The bottom of the skirt, also some silver braid and a cuff hem. The black lace and silver braid ornament the waist as well. The material of the marcelon and crepe is gross de merilk and it has been made by hand by some real French modistes.

flower. About the neck were innumerable hoops of blue among which nestled an American beauty rose. As it was opened one beheld a soft, delicate lining of geranium chiffon. It was such an evening coat as the fairies might have designed for their queen.

Another novel dress was the one with jack o' lantern sleeves. The designer was inspired by a costume in the Russian ballet. The jack o' lantern sleeves are not to be described by words, one must see them to appreciate their artistic beauty. The skirt of this dress is made panther effect, and there is a delicate and charming vest of swiss embroidery. The material is navy blue twill.

Cherries on Girdle.

A charming afternoon girdled. It was fashioned in the very popular directorio style, straight lines, and had an overdress of beige crepe meteor with an inset of fillet lace. A gay circle girdle encircles the waist and is finished with a bunch of luscious cherries.

The rows and rows of evening, afternoon and dress dresses hanging close together revealed many bright colors and materials, but the ever serviceable dark blue predominated. The taffeta dresses were most abundant. The skirts were ruffled over in panther effect and the waist lines accentuated.

There was one wonderful quilted model, very actually quilted skirt, and it was most quaint and charming too.

Three-Piece Suits.

The reporter was especially delighted with the three-piece suits shown. There was one of Algerian none in the state or the country for a city of the size of Great Falls. She gazed as she was led into the long hall-like room with rows and rows of dresses on either side. The notable thing about these dresses is the attractive accessories. Here were the basque waists, the flared skirts seen everywhere. The colors were navy, gray, brown, and black; and the materials were taffeta, Canton crepe, and crepe de chine. The taffeta is now the most popular. But it is predicted that Canton crepe will out-rival it before the end of the season. One navy blue taffeta afternoon dress was most charming and individual with a trimming of bright colored Czechoslovakian flowers applied on the skirt and sleeves.

Real Migrims Shown.

A stunning black and white evening gown of eyelet net over white satin was finished with two rows of cardinal "Tailored", Not "Tailored".

But there were suits yet to be considered, so she was whisked to another part of the department and permitted to view rows and rows of suits on racks. There, indeed, were all kinds of suits. There were exquisitely tailored models. The reporter's guide requested that the word be spelled just that way, "tailored." She explained that spelled "tailored" it suggested mannish garments, whereas "tailored" suggested the French suit which, although on severe lines, always has a feminine touch about it,—is never, never mannish. Of course, the blue suits predominated, for we all know that a dark blue suit is as essential to a well-dressed woman's wardrobe as white gloves for the theater or a reception.

Among these tailored suits there is a particular line of large sizes, Jenny. Bulky, and Drexell copies designed to give youthful lines to stout women. There were also suits for small women.

Bolero Models Shown.

Then, besides, these plainer suits there were the jaunty Spanish bolero models with box collars, and pleated skirts. There were other suits with jackets fitting tight in back and flaring at the hips.

The suit skirts were straight, flared, or plaited, but they were all short.

There were also many stunning checked suits for those who wish to get away from the "conventional" blue.

Then for the business girl who must be out in all kinds of weather and bear the brunt of spring rains, wind and dust storms of Montana, there was a fine assortment of both Scotch and English tweeds. These were made with plain skirts and regulation fitted jackets, or the beloved Norfolk which, it seems, will never be out of date.

To be worn over crisp summer dresses of an evening there were luxurious wrappy coats of soft supple fabrics. Then there were some interesting satin quilted models in coats stitched in gold.

The snappy little three-quarter sport coats would look especially well with plaid skirts.

Blouses for Sports Suits.

Before leaving the department the reporter spied some dainty hand-made blouses on a counter which she insisted on having explained to her. These blouses were just the thing to wear with suits or for sports. Some were just hemstitched, others were finished with Florentine or fillet lace. They ranged in price from $7 to $12.50. There were some neat little blouse shirts with Byron collars; some in solid colors, blue, pink or tan, and others in dainty stripes. There were some voile ones in pastel shades. These were being sold at from $5.75 to $4.25.

In the millinery department were hats of every kind and for every occasion. The newest things, the milliner said, were the boke shapes. These were quaint be-flowered and be-ribboned things. Some of the hats were jauntily trimmed with small wings.

See Record Assortment.

By this time the morning was gone, there was a luncheon appointment to keep, and the reporter decided to dedicate the afternoon to the Paris and Miss Gage's shop.

At the Paris she was met by Mr. Figman who in his most courtly manner led the way to the dress and suit department explaining that the Paris this year has the most complete line of dresses and coats it had ever had, that the assortment is second to Schaffner Marx Co. Yes, the same of billboard fame, who make such good-looking things for men. Among the suits are the plain tailored models showing the directorio influence which is heralded by the Eastern authorities on fashion as "the thing" for this spring. In fact all garments are supposed to favor the directorio period more or less. This is the period following the French revolution when there was a strong antipathy for luxury manifested in a return to strength. The distinguished feature is the straight line for the garments clinging close to the body. Their long lines, straight lines and fine tailoring. There are some beautiful models in the new covert gray. Of course, navy blue predominates. Then there is another type of suit with the tucked waist line and flared hip, this is highly embroidered and beaded.

Suit Prices Reduced.

When asked about the prices of these suits, the reporter was informed that there were suits to please all pocketbooks. There are less expensive but very neat and stylish suits of serge for from $29 to $39. This represents a decrease of from 25 to 40 per cent over the values of the same kind of suits last spring, she was told.

One cannot leave the Paris by the Third street door without stopping to admire the remarkable house dresses shown in that part of the store. My! my! What a long way we have traveled from the ungrateful mother husbands our mothers wore to do their house work in. Here are most bewitching garments, loose and comfortable as any mother Hubbard could ever have been, but made up in brilliant ment established, featuring popular priced hats for women and children. The annual mill end sales are going on there this month, which means that new spring merchandise is being featured in all departments at special prices. The blouse section is offering hundreds of lovely new spring blouses in Canton crepe, crepe de chine, georgette crepe, and tricotlette at very popular prices. In the ready-to-wear department new spring coats, suits and dresses are being offered at low prices, and the eager throng of shoppers to be found there showed that the public were responding to the offer of "something reasonable in price at last."

Cpt Prices Fashion Week.

When Mr. McNair of "McNair's" was asked by the reporter what preparations he was making for fashion week he said that he was making some special prices for the benefit of out-of-town customers, and city customers as well, on taffeta and Canton crepe where. There were some of those individual and very becoming cape coats. One of tan chamoisistyn, called a vanity coat, with a Inverness cape attached to Japanese sleeves. It was just the sort of thing that would be most charming on cool summer nights over dainty, crisp, organdie dresses. There was another attractive little tan coat of toile de laine with the new cape collar finished with a tassel as was the belt. It had also the roomy Japanese sleeves that keep summer dresses from being mussed. It was beautifully stitched in silk. There was a demure shepherdess dress of dark blue taffeta embroidered in gold tinsel with elbow sleeves edged with gray silk ruffles, which ruffles also formed a quaint ruff about the neck, blue velvet ribbon. The waist was fashioned on basque lines, and the skirt was made paniere effect. It was something which would give

Of course, she might run over to McDonald's and consult the gallant Mr. Dailey as to the proper way one should be shod who might wear any of the new things she had seen. But it was late, and she was tired. She reasoned that one could tell just by looking in the shop windows "what was what". Therefore he it known to those who have not already gazed, that gray suede slippers with straps are very good this spring. Gray shoes for dressup will be the most chic thing. Another thing in footwear is that sensible heels for everyday street wear are at last to be had.
