

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of...

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Compromise Made With Dicky.

Do you mean you're going to bring them all out here tonight? My voice rose in almost hysterical dismay over the telephone at Dicky's announcement. He had suggested that if I had found a house I could "rustle in some furniture" so that the family could stay in it. A vision of the ruin which I had just bought flashed before me, and one more mirth-provoking still, that of my august mother-in-law's face if I should escort her to a room in it.

"Why, of course!" Dicky's voice ascended the vocal scale now, but in anger. What's the matter? Haven't you found a house? You've been there two days. The delicious masculinity of this helped to keep my own anger down. Besides, I knew that Dicky, angry, was apt to rush into one of his rages, and I was most uncomfortably conscious that if Edith Fairfax were not actually near at his elbow, she was sufficiently near him to understand every inflection of his voice, every expression of his face. No matter what it cost my pride, I must placate my husband, at least until this present emergency was passed.

I'll Manage Some Way.

"I beg your pardon, Dicky," I said soothingly. "Of course, it's all right to bring them out. And I'll manage some way."

"Do you mean to say you haven't a house?" Dicky reiterated, but I noticed with exultation that the anger had gone from his voice.

"Yes, I have the only place to be bought or rented anywhere in this section," I replied promptly. "But it isn't habitable yet. Mother never would step inside it until it has been cleaned. But we can manage nicely, nevertheless. Tell me something more important. Is there anything to that scarlet fever or is it some of mother's—"

"Usual fever," Dicky interrupted. "You've hit it! She's got a bug on scarlet fever, you know, and she read in some New York paper a list of deaths from different diseases, the usual report thing, you know. And, of course, nothing would do her except to conjure up an epidemic. No, there's nothing to it, but you couldn't convince her of it in a month of Sundays."

"Why try to convince her, then, with a rush of tenderness at the thought of my baby boy nearing New York. 'Oh, Dicky, think! Junior is almost there. And you'll have a chance to kiss him first. Don't take them all.'"

"Can't promise," he returned, and my heart leaped at the tenderness in his voice. Gone for the moment was my jealousy of Edith Fairfax, swallowed up in the blessed consciousness of that triune tie of father, mother and child, which no one else in the world can share.

A Necessary Request.

Then, shattering, spoiling the moment of sentiment, came the prosaic remembrance of the certified check I had promised on the morrow, and which I must go to New York to get for I knew that I would never get it back in the specified time by mail. And I was practically certain that Mrs. Burgess—egged on, as she would be by the crafty Mr. Olcott—might become suspicious at delay and perhaps balk at the bargain.

There was nothing else for me to do but to cajole Dicky, something I despise.

"Dicky, dear, I cooed, will you do something startling for me, and wait until you come out for the explanation?"

"Why, why," he stammered, "of course."

"Promise not to say anything out loud when you hear what it is?" I continued archly. "I don't want Edith to hear you swear."

He laughed shortly, a bit embarrassed, I imagined.

"That part of it won't matter, I fancy," he said to himself. "Shoot. I have four thousand dollars, as you know, in my own account, which father gave me." I said, "and I can't get hold of it without coming into New York. Will you please bring out with you a certified check for that amount made out to me? I'll repay you when you get here."

"What the—," he began, but I interrupted him ruthlessly.

"You promised," I reminded him. "Dicky, I know this sounds as if I had gone out of my mind, but I'll explain everything when you get here. And I'll promise you something—unless you're willing that I shall use that check when you get here I'll hand it back to you. Is that a bargain?"

"Well, under those conditions, I'll do it," he said reluctantly. "But I can't imagine—"

"Don't," I said laughingly. "You'd never guess the truth. What train are you going to take, the four or the forty-seven?"

"Whichever I can make," he replied. "Better meet both of them."

"Of course," I said, and at his goodbye I hung up the telephone receiver, feeling like a petticoated Machiavelli.

Barnes' Circus Here Today; Parade to Be at 10 O'Clock

The circus parade will be at 10 o'clock this (Saturday) morning.

The two sections of the 52-car special train of the A. G. Barnes circus are scheduled to arrive in Great Falls at 5:30 o'clock this morning. They will be switched to the siding in the vicinity of the grounds at Twenty-third street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues.

Unloading of the 1200 animals which the circus is said to carry, including everything from the smallest of the menagerie animals to the elephants and the draft horses, and erection of the tent quarters will be accomplished in time to permit the animals and performers to start from the grounds, on their way down town, at 10 o'clock.

The parade will be routed from Twentieth street west on Third avenue, past both the Columbus and Deaconess hospitals, to give the patients their opportunity to see it. It will strike Central avenue at Ninth street and turn west, to traverse the business district.

The afternoon performance will begin at 2 o'clock and the evening performance at 8. George Davis, steward for the circus, arrived in Great Falls yesterday morning from Lewistown, to buy provisions for the human performers and the feed for the animals, and to make all other arrangements for the comfort of the circus people.

Thursday night and the funeral services will be conducted from the W. H. George chapel at 2 p. m. Sunday. The Rev. E. E. Francis of the Christian church will officiate. The pall-bearers and firing squad will be chosen from former comrades of French. The services will be held under the auspices of the American Legion and the Odd Fellows. French was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam French.

The United States has 11,188 square miles of peat bogs.

CHORUS CONCERT PLEASURES AUDIENCE

Great Falls Musical Arts Association Finishes Season With Entertainment.

The concert of the Musical Arts association in the Presbyterian church Thursday evening was enjoyed by a good sized audience. The chorus was with Professor R. A. Keyes at every move of the baton. Professor Keyes was congratulated by many for having accomplished such a finished production in such a short period of preparation. The work of Arthur Merrick at the organ and George McCloy at the piano added much to the success.

In the first number Mrs. J. W. Speer was given an opportunity to show the wide range and excellent quality of her voice. Mrs. J. A. Claud-Dellah, "O Love, Lend Me Thine Aid." She is one of the new singers in the city and presented an attractive stage appearance. The other solo numbers were given by Mrs. A. Donovan, "My Phantom Double," by Schubert, and "Dedication," by Franz.

The "Bridal Chorus," the "Catenet Song" and the "Sextette from Lucia" were popular numbers with the audience.

The Great Falls Musical Arts association has made rapid strides in both number and ability to present pleasing performances during its first season. Next year it is the intention of a number of solo singers to join the association and familiarize themselves with work with a chorus. The members of the association will assist in the program planned to be held in the Grand theater soon to raise funds for the needy.

"For Better or For Worse"

At Life's Threshold—about to enter the bigger, wider world—to encounter its ups and downs, its give-and-take—to meet her destiny.

Of all her new responsibilities, the most important of all, perhaps, will be the choice of foods for the table. So much depends upon its wise selection. The future of her happiness and the success of her help-mate will be influenced by it in no little degree.

For scientists tell us, the difference between health and the lack of it, between mental vigor and the reverse, depends largely upon the food that is eaten.

Vitamines are the biggest need in the diet of every person. They are found in fresh vegetables and fruits, in milk, butter, yeast and grains. Every loaf of Eddy's bread is rich in this vital element—dependably rich, because we make certain by scientific means that the ingredients used are up to standard in nourishment and that full nourishment is retained in the finished loaf. Eddy's Bread means health insurance to youth and age. Eddy's bread is the most constant source of this most vital of all nutrients—Vitamines.
