Week in the Churches

Jesus and His Gospel Help in Stress of Inability to Conform to Law's Demands. Pastor Rohlfing Draws Distinction That One Asks Rigid Compliance, While Other Is Like Good Samaritan.

Text: Luke, x: 23-37. In his Sunday morning sermon at Trinity Lutheran church, the Rev. Paul E. Rohlfing, pastor, drew the parable of the good Samaritan as a true and adequate description of the relation between the law and the gospel.

And there is not one among us who has kept one of the Ten Commandments. We are all as the man in the parable, who fell among the thieves, who stripped him of his garment, who left him to be devoured by the dogs.

St. Ann's Activities for Ensuing Week; No Mass During Retreat. Activities in Catholic fraternal and religious circles for the coming week will take place in St. Ann's hall as follows: A. A. R. L. Tuesday evening; Nat. Council of Catholic Men, Wednesday evening; Knights of Columbus, Thursday evening; boy scout troops 9 and 10, Wednesday and Friday, in the gymnasium.

CHAUTAQUA ASSURED 1922 SAYS MANAGER. Closing Numbers of Course Orchestra Concert and Appeal for Child Play.

That the Ellison-White Chautauqua will visit Great Falls next year is an assured fact, according to Director Harrington, who said Sunday night that the necessary 40 guarantors of a sale of 500 season tickets had voluntarily agreed to the contract. He expects 50 before leaving the city, but this is not necessary.

GLOBE GIRDLER TIGER SLAYER, AUTHOR, HERE. Auto Hobo From Famous Penna Shoe Town Camps Here on Way to Coast Home.

C. R. Delany comes naturally to the life of a hobo. He is leading, just now at the auto tourist park for a few days. He comes from Hancock, down in southeastern Pennsylvania, the region made famous by Helen Martin's Pennsylvania Dutch romances, where they make shoes noted for their quality and toughness. He is not hobo, he's trekking in a Henry Ford and, moreover, he's on the final lap of a two-year tour of the world which has as its terminus a fine ranch home in southern California.

U. B. Pastor Preaches and Increases Flock. The Rev. W. R. Nelson, of the United Brethren church here, spent Sunday conducting services at Prairie chapel, which is located six miles northwest of Here. Many were baptized and taken into the church. The Prairie chapel congregation composes a part of Mr. Nelson's parish in Montana.

Parish Schools Will Open Term Sept. 6. The parish schools of the Catholic church of this city will open their 1921-22 school year on September 6. Newcomers and those sending their children for the first time are requested by the school officials to register their children before the opening of the school. The following are the names of the children who will be registered: St. Thomas Orphans' Home.

CHICHESTER'S PILLS. THE DIAMOND BRAND. This is the best of all pills. It is the only one that is guaranteed to cure constipation, biliousness, indigestion, headache, and all other ailments of the bowels.

LEWISTOWN TAKE OVER OIL JOURNAL. Lewistown, Aug. 21.—The Montana Gusher, an oil weekly, will be published in the future by Trepp and Heinicke, newspaper men, it was announced.

Every Soul is a Preacher

But Sermon May Not Be to Glory of God Says Pastor. Only Real Gospel Among Those of Brotherhood, Peace, Social Hygiene and Legion of Others, He Says, Is Christ Came to Save: You.

"Faithful is the saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus has come into the world to save sinners."—1 Tim. 1-15.

Taking as his subject, "The Gospel We Preach," the Rev. J. Helmer Olson, pastor of the Bethlehem Lutheran church here, spoke to his audience on Sunday morning concerning the fundamental principles of the Christian faith.

Every soul is a preacher, he said, but the sermon may not be to the glory of God. The only real gospel among those of the Brotherhood, Peace, Social Hygiene and Legion of Others, he said, is the gospel of Christ.

Why Mother Graham Insisted That Junior "Is Psychic"

Oh, Missis Graham! My Missis Graham! Oh! so glad to see you! Katie (truly) tumbled from a high seat of the huge moving van before the slower Jim or the driver of the van could come to her assistance, flew to the ground and hugged me ecstatically.

"I am just glad to see you, Katie," I returned warmly. "But, child, you must have ridden on that lead all night! Aren't you terribly tired?"

"Not a bit," she answered, "I demanded with the unconscious impertinence that in another girl would be unbearable, but which Dicky and I have come to regard as the sane, good-natured, affectionate tolerance with which he has regarded his volatile, tempestuous little wife ever since their wedding day."

"Good morning, Mrs. Graham," he said, taking a picture of me as I sat by Dicky. "Don't worry about Katie. We didn't start until after midnight, so we had a pretty good sleep before leaving, and she curled up on a mattress on the floor and slept most of the time out here."

"Dot no such ting!" Katie declared indignantly. "I go back on dot matter because you and Tom say seat so crowded, I'm not so peaceful, but I no sleep more dan two, three minutes all night. I hear everyting you say; you put dot in your pipe and smoke dot all night long!"

Across Katie's unconscious head I flashed a reassuring, comprehending smile to Jim, who was obviously embarrassed at Katie's unequivocal denial of the state of her mind. Of course, what had happened. Katie had wanted to martyrize herself by sitting up all night. Jim and the driver, Tom, whom I recognized as the husband of Jim's sister, had been a kindly little conspiracy to induce her to lie down, and she had, indeed, slept through the journey. Her fresh color and bright eyes belied her claim for a sleepless night, and I had never before drawn the admission from Katie.

"What Junior Demanded. "Well, you're not sleepy, Katie, you must be hungry!" I said peacefully. "So come in and meet Mrs. Tieser. I know she will fix you up some breakfast."

"She won't have to come inside to meet me," Mrs. Tieser's cordial voice replied. "I'm right here behind you, and I'll have some breakfast ready in a jiffy."

She shook hands with the three strangers as I introduced them, making them welcome in her genuine, wholesome fashion, and bore Katie off indoors that she might bathe her face and hands and get ready for the day, leaving the two men to her husband's mercies, all in a capable, unhurried minute.

As I followed them indoors, I heard Katie's excited, childish voice in the more measured tones. I surmised that the two women of such widely differing temperaments were forming one of the most intimate friendships which lonely women sometimes indulge in, and was glad for the sake of both.

With a little apprehensive start I looked around for Mother Graham. I knew that Katie's visit to me on the porch and had witnessed Katie's impulsive descent from the load. But I had not seen her since. Had she been angered because of Katie's affectionate greeting to her husband's friends? But similar exhibitions of temper on like occasions, recognizing that the basic reason for them is a subconscious jealousy that the girl should care so much more for me than she does for her husband.

"I gave a weary little sigh. I felt in no mood to take up again the role of buffer between my mother-in-law's touchiness and my little maid's temper, which had been so bad. But even as I began to pity myself in genuine martyr fashion I heard my mother-in-law's voice, subdued, a bit excited.

"I ascended the stairs, ready to find Junior dancing up and down in his crib and demanding 'Tatie. Dooner wants Tatie.'"

"I'll tell you, Margaret, the child is 'psychic,' she said excitedly. "Here he has no idea that Katie is anywhere in the neighborhood, and he wakens out of a sound sleep demanding her."

I prudently refrained from reminding her that we all had talked before the child of Katie's coming. Then I took advantage of her good nature—my evidence of Junior's precocity puts her in the seventh heaven of amiability—to dress the child and hurry him downstairs to see the girl who adores him.

"I'll tell you, Margaret, the child is 'psychic,' she said excitedly. "Here he has no idea that Katie is anywhere in the neighborhood, and he wakens out of a sound sleep demanding her."
