REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

HOW LILLIAN CAME BACK FROM HER RIDE

Marion's eyes widened with interest as she saw her mother descend from Colonel Travers' automobile and watched the stately politeness of the officer in taking leave of her. That he had meant to escort her to the house, I guessed, and I smiled to myself as Lillian frustrated his purpose by giving him her hand in farewell. He bent over it ceremoniously, and Marion gasped ecstatically.

"Oh, Auntie Madge, Uncle Robert!" she exclaimed. "Isn't it just like a movie! Only he ought to have kissed her hand. I wonder why he didn't. Oh, Uncle Robert, don't! You squeezed me so tight you hurt!"

"I'm sorry, dear," the man loosened the arm which he had involuntarily tightened around the child at the sting of her heedless, unconscious words, and Marion, wriggling down, ran to meet her mother.

Robert Savarin rose as Lillian came toward the steps, and I adroitly slipped in front of him, determined to keep the management of the situation in my own hands.

"Do hurry, Lillian," I entreated laughingly. "Here's a starving man who has waited breakfast so that you and I may have a second cup of coffee with him."

"He'd better look out or I may devour the whole breakfast," she retorted lightly, coming up the steps. "There's nothing like a motor ride in the air to give you a second appetite. Robert, you are a dear old fellow. Thank you, as he took her motor coat from her. "Now for the breakfast room."

Nothing could have been more casual, more matter of fact, than her manner, and yet I saw that Marion's ridiculous little speech concerning the movies had roused again the absurd jealousy concealed behind Robert Savarin's calmness. Would he be able to control it, or would he—

"With a heartfelt little sigh of relief, I saw Dicky rounding the corner of the house, and knew that if he were only in the mood to set going his never-failing stock of nonsense, there would be no chance for Robert Savarin to betray his jealousy or to brood over it."

"Morning, everybody!" Dicky called. "Madge, may I inquire why you did not waken me when you rose to be queen of the May this morning? If I hadn't had the subconscious thought of those fish Mrs. Cosgrove promised to fry for breakfast, I would have been sleeping yet. If you've eaten them all, I'll—who's had breakfast, anyway?"

"Everybody but you and Robert," I returned. "But I'm sure there are plenty of fish for both of you, Mrs. Cosgrove would never fail you like that."

"Cupid alone knows what a woman will do, and he won't tell," Dicky observed, walking to the dining-room door and bowing low as he ushered us in. As I pressed close after Lillian, I managed to give her an old signal which we had used when we were doing government work together during the war, and which meant that I must speak to her alone as soon as possible. It was not until we were all seated at the table that she was able to assure me by an answering signal that she had understood and would act upon my message.

"There was never a savor breakfast table. Dicky was in one of his most unseasonal moods, and I breathedlessly aided him in keeping the conversation at the frivolous key to which he had pitched it. I think Lillian comprehended what I was trying to do, for she tossed our absurdities back to us admirably, and Robert Savarin—while a close observer—could see his sub-

CLUB OFFICIAL RESIGNS PLACE IN FEDERATION

Mrs. I. N. Walker Retires From Vice Presidency; Three Soldiers Adopted.

The resignation of Mrs. I. N. Walker, who has been serving in the capacity of second vice president of the City Federation of Women's Organizations, was accepted with regret Tuesday evening at the regular meeting held in the Y. M. C. A. building. The matter of securing a new candidate for this office was placed in the hands of a nominating committee by the president Mrs. C. A. Armatage.

The members agreed to adopt three invalid soldiers who at present are stationed at Fort Harrison, where they are receiving medical treatment. They are William Elden, William J. Ellis and John Fields. Mrs. Margaret Moulton is a committee to see that the boys are supplied with literature, individual letters, gifts and anything that will serve to make their lives a bit brighter.

Mrs. L. V. McLaughlin, who has charge of the committee for the sale of tuberculosis seals, reported satisfactory progress and co-operation on the part of all the affiliated clubs.

The federation is in receipt of three letters, one from the garden and home club, one from the garden and home club, and one from the garden and home club.

The district president, Mrs. W. M. Treadwell, has sent a communication requesting that the affiliated clubs make use of the outlines for work and study and the literature provided by the state chairman.

Funeral Services for J. B. Walsh at Cathedral Today

Funeral services for the late James B. Walsh, known rancher of Cascade, who died Monday, will be conducted this (Wednesday) morning at 9 o'clock at St. Ann's cathedral. Highberged grouch—manfully tried to hide his annoyance. "Will you motor with me this morning?" he asked Lillian.

"I'd love to, Lillian rejoined cordially, but her eyes were on me, and I saw she was waiting for a cue to manage the prior intention I wished.

"Can you delay your trip just a few minutes, Robert?" I asked ingenuously. "Lillian has been promising for ages to draw me the outline of a fascinating little suit for Junior, which she saw in the shops one day. And I do want to get started making it today. I have the material all ready, and I'll keep her only a little while."

"Of course, as long as you wish," the artist responded courteously, and I relaxed with the assurance that I would be able to warn Lillian of Robert's reaction toward her work, before he saw her.

"She came to the point at once, as after breakfast, I strolled with her to her bungalow, leaving Junior and Marion with Dicky and Robert.

"What's up, Madge?" she asked. "Any more news of last night while I've been gone?"

"No, but it's something almost as startling," I returned, "and I have no business repeating it to you, but I feel somehow that you must."

Then I told her. Next—The Story of Smith's Plans That Lillian Told Madge.

mass will be said by the very Rev. M. T. O'Brien, V. G. Burial will be in Calvary cemetery under the auspices of the Elks' lodge. The body will be taken to the cathedral from the O'Connell undertaking parlors at 8:30 o'clock. Mr. Walsh was for nearly 15 years in the ranching business at Cascade but before moving there was in the railroad service in Great Falls. He was at one time yardmaster here for the Great Northern railway and previously was employed in different capacities by the same road.
