WRECKED IN HELENA

Dressmaker Says She Found It a Barren Field.

New York, Jan. 18.—"Women in Helena will pay you the highest prices for anything from a wrapper to a ball gown," was the pronouncement that Mrs. Susie A. Marshall says Simon Seelig made to her when he induced her to go to the Montana capital and set up a shop there. Mrs. Marshall did not find as many women as she expected seeking frills, feathers and furbelows in that region, and her pioneering was hopeless. She came back without a cent and now her suit against Seelig follows. She says she was doing a good business at 4 and 6 West Fourteenth street, but lost this on account of her trip to Helena. So she seeks to recover $5,000 damages.

HANNA A VETERAN

Washington, Jan. 18.—Senator Hanna proposes to become a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Hanna was a lieutenant in the One-hundred-and-fiftieth Ohio volunteer regiment.

LARGEST CHEST MEASUREMENT

Norwegian Volunteers in Civil War Next in Height to Native Americans.

Norway furnished the north with some of its finest soldiers during the civil war. They were not quite so tall as the native Americans, but in view of the unusual breadth of chest that led all nationalities. It is noticeable that while the Norwegians have always been a tall people their average height has greatly increased even in the last thirty years.

Physically the Norwegians are among the finest races of the world, says the New York Sun, and the statistics obtained from the recruiting stations of the native states during our own civil war, the Norwegians who enlisted in the union army were the tallest of all races with the exception of the native Americans. This table is of unusual interest, especially in view of the apparent improvement in Norwegian physical development as shown by the present statistics of the Norwegian army.

The average height of more than 300,000 native-born American soldiers is given by Baxter at 171.9 centimetres, with an average breadth of chest of 84.9 centimetres. The average height of over 2,000 Norwegian soldiers who enlisted is given as 174.4 centimetres, with a breadth of chest of 87.2 centimetres. Neither the Swedes, nor the Scotch, nor the Irish, nor the English, nor the Germans, nor the French attained this average height or breadth of chest with the exception of the Swedes as to the latter particular. In breadth of chest the Swedes were the same as the Norwegians, but they were not so tall. The Scotch were also 174.4 centimetres, but there was a difference of two centimetres in breadth of chest, and while the Americans were a trifle taller than the Norwegians, their narrowness of chest was such as to make a very unfavorable comparison.

The figures of the recruiting stations of the Norwegian army, not including the three most northern provinces of the country, where the physical average is exceptionally high, show a remarkably steady physical improvement. From 1878 to 1882 the average height of the soldiers enlisted was 168.8 centimetres. Fifty-two per cent of the men examined were found to be fit for line service, and 8.7 per cent were found to be of weak frame. From 1883 to 1887 the average height was 169.1 centimetres, while those fit for line service had increased to 58 per cent and those of weak frame had decreased to 6 per cent. From 1888 to 1892 the average height went up to 169.6 centimetres, those fit for line service to 66 per cent, and those of weak frame to 4.3 per cent. From 1893 to 1897 the average height was 170.1 centimetres, those fit for line service 65 per cent and those of weak frame 2.3 per cent. The height had not yet reached that of the Norwegian volunteers in America in the sixties, but the latter were undoubtedly older, and growth after 22 years of age is doubtless considerable. In a battalion of the Norwegian army this growth has been observed to be about three centimetres in 20 to 25 years of age. A man 172 centimetres tall would be, according to our measurements, 5 feet 7 3/4 inches tall.

This fact not only bodes well for Norway, but it cannot fail to be regarded with satisfaction by the people of the United States. Thousands of these great, strong, light-haired sons and daughters of the north have been pouring into this country, and in the end they will prove a splendid material for a composite race which ours of the future will be.

No other country in Europe, with the possible exception of Ireland, has lost so many of its children by emigration to the United States as Norway. If its relative size is taken into consideration, in 1890 there were over 20,000 Norwegian persons in the United States, and since then the number has been increasing at the rate of 6,000 a year.

NORWEGIANS DEMAND THAT THEIR KING SHOULD LIVE AMONG THEM.

Contrary to the general expectation the Swedish press has been most considerate in its treatment of Captain 'Torkildsen's' strong article, in which he demanded that the Norwegian storting should insist on the royal house living at least six months of the year in Norway. Derision and ridicule were anticipated from over the line. Svenska Dagbladet finds the proposition not unreasonable. The royal family is just as much the reigning house in Norway as in Sweden and should have a home there. Likewise the storting members should receive a considerable portion of their education in Norwegian schools. The result would tend to unite the people of the two countries more closely, as the prejudices against the king would disappear.

SWEDEN'S LIQUOR LAW

Reduces Taxation and Increases Public Sobriety.

The Bolag, or limited company, which controls the liquor traffic in Stockholm, has just issued its report for the last twelve months. The company alone is empowered to issue licenses to approved tenants of cafes and restaurants, the full market value of the concession being paid in each case. As the result of the past year's working a profit of over 2,000,000 kroner ($655,000) has been realized, and of this amount 80 per cent is handed over to the municipal authorities in relief of the rates. In Sweden the Goblegh system is held to be a triumph, and a large number of licensed houses is being gradually diminished.

TO LONDON

Holger Drachmann Indites a Poem to the Old Town.

Holger Drachmann, the Danish poet, who received a warm greeting from the gathering of authors, artists and actors at the Savage club in London about a fortnight ago, had prepared a graceful acknowledgment of his reception in England. He had written a short poem "To London," which he read out in an English translation. Here are three stanzas:

Then giant city, where the million labors, While thousands on their beds of ruses sleep, My dear, old, tragic London, where my brave men and women, bleed, toil, laugh and weep!

Each morn I see thy sun through vapors gleaming, As crimson as the true heart's holy blood, And still at night its color sets me dreaming Of primal force, resolute and good.

Stern school that saw my youth and manhood meeting, Receive my love, and you whose voice and hand Have given me golden welcome, take my greeting: A heartfelt greeting from the "smallest land."

A Quaint Swedish School House.
