ALL HAVE ADJOURNED

Campbell of Clyde; treasurer, S. A. Steenson of Lakeville; state organizer, H. V. Poore of Bird Island. These officers held until the final meeting in this city, when the plan of organization will be adopted as well as a new name.

J. C. Hanley's St. Paul convention also formed a state organization, electing the following officers:

Following are the officers elected by the national grain growers:

M. P. Moran of Graceville, Minn., president; H. Greely of Chicago, first vice president; W. J. O'Brien of Duluth, second vice president; W. N. Allen of Meriden, Kan., third vice president; J. C. Hanley of St. Paul, secretary-treasurer and general business manager; M. S. Blodgett of Duluth, national organizer; J. S. ALL PRESENT MAY VOTE

Attorney General's Interpretation of Library Election Law.

Last winter, at the solicitation of representatives of the smaller towns of the state, the legislature passed a law making all libraries in towns of less than 50,000 people elective. Thereof the members of the boards in these towns were appointed by the mayors. It was claimed that this appointive power often defied the will of the people in regard to library management.

It is discovered now that the law provides for keeping the polls open only one hour, and, manifestly, in several of the larger places it will be impossible for all to vote in that time. The vote is taken on the third Saturday of July and in a manner similar to the school elections, at one central place instead of by precincts as in ordinary elections. The Australian method of voting is not designated, the law saving simply "by ballot."

Both the attorney general and the library commission are being besought for advice.

Assistant Attorney General Danohover has sent out opinions to the effect that the old law were legislated out of office by the new act and that as it was the plain intent of the legislature that all electors should vote, the election judges could use their judgment in keeping the polls open as long as they presented themselves at the polls within the prescribed hour had cast their ballots.

Portrait of Northrop

Library Board is Presented With a Painting by Thorpe.

At its last meeting, the library board accepted a gift of a portrait of Dr. Cyrus Northrop. The portrait is the work of Preston Thorpe and that as it was the former resident in Washington. He had a studio at the capitol and painted portraits of a number of distinguished persons and public characters. The picture is three-quarter length and represents the president as he might be at a commencement occasion, presenting diplomas. The likeness is very good. It has not been determined where it will be hung permanently, but is at present in the directors' room, where it makes a handsome decoration.

After Senator Potter's Place

Senator E. G. Potter, who has been more or less prominent in local politics for many years past, is not to secure a re-nomination in the fourth district without a contest. Indeed, statesmanlike material is so common in the fourth ward that one could secure that position without a fierce fight. Mr. Potter's popularity is conceded, but there is a general belief among the ambitious ones that the two terms which he has had will satisfy him, and as there has been more or less talk of Potter as republican candidate for sheriff, the anxious ones are keeping his seat in the senate in constant sight.

Alderman A. Merrill has had just taste enough of legislative delights in the city hall to cultivate the idea that he is fitted for larger fields, and his friends are actively pushing his claims for the senatorial nomination. It is conceded that the primaries are a long way off, but the Merrill men are firm believers in the old adage that "the early bird gets the worm."

Among others who are likely to contest for this place in case Senator Potter does not run again are W. S. Winnell, formerly a representative from the ward and the author of the original Minneapolis primary election law, and William P. Roberts, one of the present representatives from that district, who feels that his low terms in the lower house entitles him to promotion when the opportunity arises.

KING'S NARROW MISS STUDIED OIL FIELDS

The Grand Jury Almost Had Him Indicted.

Mrs. M. L. Knettle Examined Those in the Southwest.

CHRISTENSON ASSAULT CASE CALIFORNIA AND TEXAS REGIONS

She is Interested in Former and Has High Opinion of the Latter.

The grand jury came within a scratch of returning an indictment against N. W. King, chief of the detectives. The last day the jury was in session the county attorney's office drew up the necessary papers accusing Inspector King of assault in the second degree, alleging that he had been guilty of an unprovoked attack upon Walter Christenson while the latter was under arrest at the central police station.

That this indictment was never completed and returned was the fact that County Attorney Boardman after a careful examination of the law, reached the conclusion that the offense alleged was not an assault, but a battery and not indictable. It was held that Christenson's only method of redress was through a trial in the municipal court. It was possible, of course, to bring in an indictment for assault in the second degree and under it convict for the lesser crime of assault and battery, but neither the grand jury nor the county attorney thought it wise to do that.

However, it was upon this evidence in this case that the jury particularly based its extreme criticism of the detective.

She the G. J. for Libel.

King and other victims of the grand jury "roast" are considering, so it is said, the advisability of commencing an action against the individual members of the jury whose names are affixed to the report in question. Such a proceeding would at least have the merit of novelty, but many good lawyers scout the possibility of recovering in any action thus brought either for libel or slander.

It is asserted that despite the custom which has grown up, the law does not explicitly confer the authority upon a grand jury to inquire into the conduct of a grand juror. It is argued that the grand jury, having exceeded their authority, would be legally liable for action taken without authority. It is upon that assumption any such action would have to be taken.

What the Law Says.

The statutes, in defining the powers and duties of grand juries, merely say: "The grand jury shall have power, and it is their duty, to inquire into all public offenses committed or triable in the county, and to present them to the court, either by presentment or indictment."

Defining a presentment the statutes say: "A presentment is an informal statement in writing by the grand jury representing to the court that a public offense has been committed which is triable in the county. That there is a reasonable ground for believing that a particular individual, named or described, has committed it."

Inasmuch as these paragraphs are the only ones to be found in the statutes relating to the grand jury, it can readily be seen that in making its "roast" the grand jury stepped outside the exact technical lines laid down for it.

The Other Side.

It is generally accepted as good law, however, that members of such a body as a grand jury are exempt from civil prosecution based upon any action taken as such grand jury and the American and English Encyclopaedia of Law covers this point in the following paragraph, which is quoted in its entirety: "The grand jury are protected in the discharge of their duty and cannot be held liable in civil or criminal action for their findings, even though dictated by malice or lacking any foundation in fact."

It will be noticed, however, that it merely says the members are "protected in the discharge of their duty," and that seems to leave the question open in case of gross negligence. The strict lines laid down by law.

Attorneys Are Doubtful.

The attention of many local attorneys has been called to the point involved, but none of them is willing to say that the case of Carter's little liver pills before Erwin & Mead, whose advice has been sought by the chief of detectives. Mr. Erwin is absent from the city and Mr. Mead's office is in St. Paul. The subject has been brought to his attention, declares that he really has no knowledge whether or not action will be instituted.

That tired, languid feeling and dull headache is very disagreeable. Take two of Carter's Little Liver Pills before retiring, and you will find relief. They never fail to do good.

Blue Jay Kills Sparrow Captain

English sparrows are a good deal like wolves; in a pack they are not afraid to attack a bird of another feather, no matter how much he may outweigh them individually in size, strength and fighting ability. So fierce is their onslaught on such occasions that in a majority of cases they get decidedly the best of the object of their attack. The blue jay, however, is not so easily overcome. It is a bird of great courage and tenacity, and it is not until it has been severely wounded that it yields to its enemies.

The blue jay had intrenched himself securely in the leafy recesses of a large oak tree, and from his retreat, with discordant cries, defied all attempts of the sparrows to dislodge him. Just what was the cause of the trouble was not apparent. Possibly the sparrows objected to the introduction of the blue jay's rasping notes in a usually quiet neighborhood.

Anyway, they assailed that tree and its occupant in a perfect cloud, all the while keeping up a shrill chattering which almost drowned the battle cry which the blue jay uttered back at them. There was one sparrow that appeared to be the leader of the band, and this fellow was particularly offensive to the jay. He flew a little nearer the bird with the indigo suit than his fellow sparrows, and at times pecked at him in a most exasperating manner on the downy throat.

The blue jay was content for some time simply to repel the attack and to act entirely on the defensive. Then, with the strategy of a military genius, he decided to stop the riot.

The next time the king-sparrow swooped dangerously near, the blue jay grabbed him in a fierce embrace with bill and claws and in a trice, as both fluttered wildly in the air, had beheaded him.

Then he dropped his victim in the gutter and went contentedly back to his perch, while the sparrows, minus a leader, took refuge in flight.

Another Fletcher Trick

Mayor Ames' Idea of Megard's Candidacy for Mayor.

"As to Phil Megard's mayoralty kite," remarked Mayor Ames with a grim smile, "I do not appreciate that it will fly high enough to attract much attention. Don't you see it is merely a trick of Fletcher's. He fixed things up before the election, and has merely sought to divert my attention by firing a gun in the wrong direction. Excuse me while I laugh, but some of Uncle Loren's political tricks tickle me so I can't help it."

One for the Railway Commission

The evident desire of the majority of the members of the state railway and warehouse commission to restore the outrageous freight tariffs which were in force on the range roads until summary action was taken by the Lind commission last fall is having the effect of calling public attention to the present body in a pointed manner and may result in legislative action at the special session to be held next winter which will take from the commission the right which it now enjoys of regulating the tariff on the roads in question.

Speaking regarding this matter a Minneapolis member of the lower house of the legislature said:

"If the railway commissioners have the nerve to restore the old prohibitive tariffs, which serve only to crush out the independent mine owners and thereby depress the value of the most valuable iron district in the known world to all save the Carnegies and the Rockefellers, you can depend upon it that the legislature will take summary action. Personally I believe that the special session of the legislature which will take from the commission the right which it now enjoys of regulating the tariff on the roads in question.

Winona republicans are already grooming Representative W. B. Anderson for the position upon the district bench now occupied by A. H. Snow, and it is believed in Van Santville that the republican nomination will easily be captured by Anderson and his friends, notwithstanding the opposition of James A. Twiney and his sympathizers. It is believed that Anderson, who was defeated in the last fight by Judge Snow, the latter a democrat, is likely to put up a contest for preliminary rounds. The logic of the situation in that section of the state is very strongly in Anderson's favor, inasmuch as he can obtain the support of those who have always stood with him in past political fights and also count upon the active encouragement and sympathy of James A. Twiney and his friends, who are willing to have Anderson safely lodged upon the bench and out of the way of congressional ambitions.

The district comprises Winona, Washburn and Olmsted counties, and is frequently carried by the democrats.

Wabasha county also has a possible candidate in the person of Senator Allen Greer, who has been credited heretofore with a burning desire to succeed Mr. Twiney in congress. It is now whispered that the Lake City statesman has come to the conclusion that Twiney is too hard a proposition to tackle, and has accordingly decided to put in an car in the judgeship race.
