DANGER TO FLOUR

Difference in Rates Causes Exportation of Wheat FOR FOREIGN MANUFACTURE. The excessive exports of wheat from Atlantic ports during the past few weeks have been the cause of serious thought on the part of local millers. The daily average exported from Atlantic ports for the six weeks ending July 20, 1901, was about one million bushels. This has broken records, but the flour manufacturers who desire to see more flour and less wheat sent to Europe are not pleased with the situation. Conservative millers are of the opinion that the growing exportation of American wheat is a menace to the American flour trade. Minneapolis has not begun to suffer from this movement, but Kansas City and other western towns have. Minneapolis has been increasing its trade because of the very high grade of its flour products.
