DOOR-TO-DOOR

Thereby Establishing the Fact That He Had Rabies.

LILJA'S TREATMENT WAS TIMELY The Rabbit Had Been Inoculated From the Dog That Bit the Boy.

It was a wise move on the part of the parents of little Rurik Lilja, who was bitten by a supposedly mad dog nearly three weeks ago, to take him immediately to the near substitute at Chicago for treatment. The doctor's opinion shows beyond the possibility of a doubt that the dog was afflicted with rabies.

The boy was bitten eighteen days ago. On the following day Dr. J. P. Corbett, city bacteriologist, inoculated two rabbits with a culture made from a portion of the dog's brain for the purpose of determining to an absolute certainty the question of its condition. One of the rabbits died a day or two later from the shock of the operation. The other lived and has been carefully watched for evidences of rabies.

When the dog was mad, rabies was certain to develop in the rabbit two or three days and three weeks after the inoculation. Yesterday the rabbit began to show signs of distress. He refused to eat and was unsteady on his legs. This morning his hind legs were found to be paralyzed, and he showed unmistakable signs of lack of co-ordination, a sure rabies symptom. He grew rapidly worse and died later this afternoon.

Dr. Corbett declares that there were present all the established symptoms of rabies and that the dog was undoubtedly mad, and he so reported officially to the health department to-day.

The disease would probably not have developed in Lilja boy for several days yet, in Dr. Corbett's opinion, and immediate recourse to the Pasteur treatment following the establishment of the fact that the dog was mad, might have saved the boy. But it is always the wisest course, he says, to take the treatment as soon as possible after the person is bitten. The chances for a cure are much better.

The dogs bitten by the mad dog will probably not show any signs of rabies for several weeks yet. In every case they should be kept in confinement until at least three months after the time they were bitten.

HURTS FLOUR SALES

Eastern Bakers Complain of Treatment by the Railroads.

FLOUR IS CARELESSLY HANDLED Subject to Annoying Delays and Then Delivered in Dirty Cars.

W. M. Regan, who has just returned from an extended trip, during which he visited bakeries all over the east, says that unless Minneapolis millers get together and take a decided stand against certain railroad usages they are in imminent danger of losing the larger part of their eastern trade. Eastern bakers told him that they could not buy as much Minneapolis flour as they would like simply because they cannot get fair treatment from the railroads. I heard the same objection all along the line, and I happened to call upon a Philadelphia baker who was having a discussion with a railroad man regarding this very point.

Two Months' Delay. In New Haven a baker told me that a shipment ordered from Minneapolis, although he had left this city on time, had been delayed two months by the railroads. He stands that sort of treatment, which was altogether too frequent to be accidental, and added that he would have to buy his flour nearer home.

Another baker said he had to buy his Minneapolis flour in barrels, because it was frequently reloaded into dirty cars after leaving here, and when the sacks arrived he would find them covered with dust and refuse from dirty cattle cars.

There is no reason why the Minneapolis mills should stand such treatment. You don't hear of any of Armour's shipments being delayed two months en route, or being delivered in dirty cars. He wouldn't stand for it a single minute. The result is that eastern bakers are buying flour in barrels, which they can get along with, and that in barrels, which are more expensive than sacks.

Millers Understand It. When told of the statements made by Mr. Regan regarding the shipping of flour to eastern purchasers, local millers said this morning that they could not understand complaints direct, but that they could well understand that matters were as Mr. Regan had reported them. An official of the Northwestern Milling company said this noon:

A car famine exists all over the country, and I do not doubt that flour has been reloaded into dirty cars. The flour has been compelled to use any cars they could, except flat cars, and even at that have not been able to keep pace with business. The delay complained of by the Philadelphia man was probably due to the fact that his flour went by the water route, and that stormy weather prevented its shipment from Duluth until the whole sixteen carloads had arrived. Then the delay at the other end. However, we have received no complaints from our customers, and I have no knowledge that any of them have experienced like trouble.

The Plymouth. Established 1882. Twelve Leading Stores under one roof. As a rule we object to exploiting the name of a manufacturer whose goods we use in our auxiliary departments; but there are exceptions where the production is of such high character that it is a credit to be associated with the manufacturer's name. The "Knox" Hats and "Hanan" Shoes, for instance, have come to be a synonym for correct head and foot dress the world over. Nearly a half century of manufacturing experience, with never a deviation from the highest standard, has made reputations to be proud of. Such manufacturers naturally come to the leading store in each city for the sole retail control of their goods. In everything "good-to-wear" (offered in 12 great outfitting departments), the "Plymouth" guarantee carefully endorses the guarantee of the makers. New Hanan Shoes.
