MR. FOURINER'S ART TALK

Tells St. Paul Women Northwest Has No Art Atmosphere.

At the meeting of the Women's Civic League of St. Paul yesterday afternoon Alexis Fournier, the Minneapolis landscape painter, gave a talk on landscape painting. He said that America is now in its iron art, but that America is now in its iron art, but that in time it would reach its art "In the east," said Mr. Fournier, "there is growing up a little coterie of carnest believers in and workers for art whose influence is felt, but there is no art asmosphere here in the northwest, for there are no workers." The artist explained that the Latin quarter in Paris was the mecca of an ambitious young artist, for the reason that he is sur rounded by ambitious workers like himself, all anxious to accomplish something, all ager to succeed. Drawing and painting, the tainments. The success of an artist depended upon his ability to see and feel. Everybody in time could learn to draw and paint. Not everybody could learn how to observe. Mr. Fournier touched upon the work of the im pressionists. They sought, he said, to keep to the prismatic colors, particularly red, yel-low and blue. The artist explained someof the technique of painting, telling how atmospheric effects especially were at-

OUR DAILY BREAD

Valuable Suggestions for the Kitchen and Dining-Room.

By KATHERINE KURTZ

A FEW VERY SIMPLE RECIPES By dainty dishes we do not mean those which require expensive materials for their onstruction, or any great amount of time r labor for their preparation. The foods as they are given to man's hand to be converted into bodily sustenance are all perfect of their kind. Nature makes no mistakes in the delicate blending of materials in and preserving harmony throughout. Then why should not we, when making the changes necessary in converting raw materials into such form ily, not treat these materials as religiously as nature has done; or why begrudge the necessary labor, study, patience and, if need such substances as are at our command int nutritious, digestible food? Nourishing and inexpensive substances are not always the most savory to those who are m guided more by taste than knowledge of the foods they eat. In such cases the cook must call to her aid certain little accessories, which, when used with wise judgment impart just enough character to the dish to tempt the palate without allowing it to discove lessen the wholesomeness of the food. The woman whose conscience prompts her to consider that the making of a comfortable home is the noblest occupation she can aspire to, will take delight in studying and working out from the most limited and unpromising ipplies, dishes that might grace the table of the millicnaire, and would certainly please his jaded appetite far better than the rich, heavy and often unsavory foods which have dulled his enjoyment of the most tempting offering his high-priced cook may produce.

Scotch Broth. Take the neck of mutton and wipe well with a damp cloth, but do not wash the meat Cut it from the bones and put all togethe in a stewpan with three small carrots, three small turning two onlong, a head of celery or the root and coarses stalks not fit for the table; a sprig of parsley and four quarts of cold water. Let them boil for four hours. After it has cooked one and one-half hours, take the meat and out it into neat squares and reserve for the copu. Skim off the fat as it rises and at the end of time allowed strain through a colander. If any fat remains re-move it with a piece of soft, brown paper. Then cut the vegetables into squares and put into a stewpan with two ounces of pearl barley that has been previously boiled for two hours. Add the pieces of meat and the broth, season to taste and let it boil up; then serve.

Knuckle of Veal With Rice, Put the meat in a stewpan with a pound of bacon and plenty of onlone and carrots; the latter sliced, the onlone whole. Add eight or a dozen pepper corns and a teaspoon-ful, of salt; cover with water and two tableconfuls of vinegar. Cover and cook very gently for three hours. When done, remove the meat to a hot platter; arrange the vegetables around it; make a cream sauce with some of the liquor, adding the yolk of an egg to a half pint of sauce and a little minced parsley. Pour the sauce over the meat. Serve a dish of plain-boiled rice with this dish.

Stewed Rabbit With Sausage. Prepare the rabbit as for stewing. Form a pound of sausage meat into small rolls. Put the rabbit and meat into a stewing pan and fry brown. Then place in layers in a deep baking dish and cover with a stock made by cooking the heart, liver and bones left from roasts or chops in a little water. The fat can be drained from the pan in which the meat was fried, a little hot water added and stirred over the fire a few minutes, to loosen the browned juices in the bottom the pan. Cover the stew and cook gently oven until the rabbit is tender

Cheap Beef Steak Pudding. Line a quart earthen baking dish with suct crust. Take two pounds from the thick end of the stem of beef and cut into thin strips; roll them well in flour seasoned with salt and with salt, pepper, a little minced parsley, a few drops of onion juice and bind together A little powdered sweet marjarom may be kosh Country Club Women. In order to create a fund for the improveent of its golf course, the Oshkosh Country Club is to be conducted this year on a unique o-operative plan that is deserving of success. Mrs. M. H. Eaton, one of the most prominent women in Oshkosh society, tells of the twentieth century plans of the club to keep expenses down to a low figure and the profit created for the purposes of improvement of the club home and the links. All of the work of the clubhouse-cooking, serving dishwashing, buying of supplies, the scrubbing and burnishing, is done by the women neighbors of the club. In brief, this is the utopian plan as outlined by the Oshkosh
