OUR DAILY BREAD. Valuable Suggestions for the Kitchen and Dining-Room. By KATHERINE KURTZ. Thoroughly, all over, with melted butter and place them in the oven, where they will toast slowly and evenly, turning them frequently. They must be crisp, thoroughly dried and amber-colored. Bread Boxes. The bread should have a close, firm grain for these; crumbly bread will not answer, as it cannot be cut into neat, even shapes and makes the boxes look ragged. Remove the crust, and let us add here, reserve these crusts for future use in other dishes. Cut the bread for the boxes into slices two and one-half inches thick, two and one-half inches wide and three and one-half inches long. Or they may be cut round or diamond shape. With sharp pointed knife cut around the inside, not quite half an inch from the outside and carefully remove the center crumb, leaving the bottom as thick as the sides of the box. Fry these in hot fat or brush inside and out with melted butter and toast carefully in the oven same as croissants. So-called dry bread that is several days old, is not without considerable moisture, which will be made manifest when the bread is wrapped closely in brown paper and placed in the oven. Therefore, even stale bread is not dry bread and if a thick slice is hurriedly exposed to a hot fire and the exterior is toasted nearly black it will form a crust that is bad to the moisture in the center of the loaf. For Garnishing and Serving. Beside using plain toast for breakfast there are various other uses to which toasted bread may be put. We have the croissants for soups, suppers to use with boiled eggs, croutades for poached eggs, creamed meats, etc., toasted rounds and triangles for garnishing, bread boxes, pyramids for broilers, etc. Croissants croutades and bread boxes are not always toasted, but are frequently fried in smoking hot fat like croquettes. This is always practical in ordinary households, so the simpler method can be employed. Cut the bread in the desired shapes; brush them with
