WOMEN CAN'T LOOSE IT THAT FAMILIAR 'PHONE GREETING Dr. Burton Says "Hello" Has Come to Stay Because It Fits the Need. The word "hello" as a 'phone salutation has come to stay, says Dr. Richard Burton of the university, much as the women of Evanston, Ill., may use the more elegant and possibly finicky, expressionless, "good morning," "good afternoon," etc. Says Dr. Burton: I haven't any doubt that four-fifths of the women of this town use the word "hello" when answering a telephone call. The word has simply come into common usage because of its fitness for the office which it performs. Economy is one of the compliments which can be paid it and after all "hello" is a good, old vernacular expression which, with a different spelling, is found in classics of old and quite modern English speech. The good old spelling for the word was "halloo," later "hallo," and finally the "e" sound was given the "a" and we have "hello." Personally I should like to have the spelling and pronunciation go back to the good old "hallo." Some people of refined nature, especially women, may object to the use of the word "hallo" and one woman that I know invariably calls out when taking down the receiver, "What is it?" but language is not made by propriety but by sheer necessity, and though I should like to see the word "hallo" used, I believe that the word "hello" will stay there. At any rate language cannot be made by forced processes, but only by such happy coincidences as are expressive and which get to the point. Even if the whole Bell telephone system should taboo the use of the word "hello" as a conversation opener over the telephone, it would still persist in being used.

A PIONEER SHERIFF The Late Colonel Brott Was First Sheriff of Ramsey. HE COVERED A BIG TERRITORY Among the Towns He Founded Are Sank Rapids, St. Cloud, Breckenridge. Colonel George F. Brott, who died recently in Washington, D. C., was one of the pioneers who figured prominently in the development of the state in the early days. His particular distinction in territorial days was that of being sheriff of Ramsey county when that bailiwick embraced most of Minnesota and consequently included what is now Hennepin county. He came to Minnesota in 1850, one year after the territory was formed. Minnesota then included the two Dakotas, and the three organized counties were Ramsey, Benton and St. Croix. St. Paul had been made the capitol and Alexander Ramsey was the governor. Colonel Brott says in his history that St. Paul then had about 1,200 inhabitants and that most of them were saloonkeepers and gamblers. It was the headquarters of all the Indian trading posts, and had a fur trade extending northward to the Canadian line. Once a year many half-breeds came down from Pembina, a distance of 500 miles, with long trains of two-wheeled carts loaded with furs and buffalo hides to exchange for trinkets, household goods, food and whiskey. Colonel Brott didn't like the looks of St. Paul very well. Instantly he thought that the big center of future population was to be up stream a few miles. He accordingly transferred his goods and chattels to the present site of Minneapolis, then St. Anthony. In this connection it was his delight to tell the story of the first interurban line, which he would solemnly declare was an electric one. The First Interurban. "The first passenger conveyance between the twin cities," said the colonel, "was established by a lightning rod man named Mitchell, who was in the habit of making a daily trip between the cities in his business wagon. He took all the passengers he could accommodate at a dime apiece." It was in the fall of 1851 that an election was held to choose county officers and a delegate to the legislature. There were no political parties in Minnesota. The fur company wielded the balance of political influence and the question at issue was "fur company or no fur company." Colonel Brott fought the good fight for sheriff and was triumphantly elected. His jurisdiction extended from the English possessions on the north to an indefinite line about 425 miles south, and from the Mississippi river on the east to the Missouri river on the west—a territory several times as large as that of the New England states together. Sheriff Brott's first official act was to erect a jail in the rear of the old court house in St. Paul. It was constructed of sawed timbers six inches square and was simply a log house. The ceiling and floor were made of like material and covered with two-inch planks. It had two rooms for cells and three rooms for the jailer and his family. A Famous Liquor Raid. There were few persons on the frontier in 1851 who respected either the law or its officers, and most of the writs had to be executed either by force or by strategy. The legislature had passed what was known as the "liquor law," making it the duty of the sheriff to seize and destroy all liquor held unlawfully. One William Constance was charged with having a certain quantity of hot, rebellious liquor in a warehouse on the levee, which the sheriff was commanded by writ to seize. Lot Moffit, a strong temperance advocate, who would willingly risk his life in the cause, was appointed deputy sheriff, and instructed to serve a copy of the writ on Constance. Constance refused a stay of execution of two hours, in which to consult his attorney. Wishing to show Constance all the consideration consistent with the faithful discharge of his duties, said the colonel in describing this thrilling exploit, "I made the seizure and left the liquor in the warehouse in charge of Moffit until I returned for Constance's answer." Returning two hours later, I found that Constance had mustered a force of men, ejected my deputy from the warehouse, closed and barricaded the doors and was guarding the building against citizens and officers alike. The colonel immediately swore in every able-bodied man in the town who had not gone over to the other side, and commanded them to help him execute the law. After a struggle of several hours in which many of his men were roughly treated, a truce was called, and it was stipulated that the liquor would be delivered on condition that Constance should be allowed to be withdrawn after Constance and his men could get safely away. The sheriff agreed to a cessation of hostilities on that basis, but when he again returned, found that Constance had simply summoned reinforcements. Then the sheriff summoned "twenty red-shirted lumbermen from the falls, who soon made resistance useless. The fact that most of Constance's men were by that time helpless from drink—having knocked in the heads of several barrels—persuaded him to surrender the custody of the liquor. It was bonded to await the action of the district court, and then the joke was on Sheriff Brott. The law under which the seizure had been made was declared unconstitutional, and the sheriff was obliged to pay $1,000 for enforcing the measure. Later, when he seized a quantity of liquor at St. Anthony, miscreants crawled under the building in which it was stored, bored holes through the floor and barrels, and drew off all the liquor, for which the colonel was also forced to pay.

A Founder of Towns. It was in 1852 that Colonel Brott, Colonel John H. Stevens, Governor Ramsey, Judge Meeker and Stewart B. Garvey explored Lake Minnetonka, which had been discovered the same year by Calvin Tuttle. Colonel Brott founded several large towns of Minnesota, among them Sank Rapids, St. Cloud, Millie Lacs City and Breckenridge. When the colonel reached St. Paul in 1850 on the steamer Yankee, a dozen Sioux Indians rushed down the bank and charged aboard. They had on their war paint and were apparently thirsting for blood. Colonel Brott reached for his gun, but was informed that the Indians were peaceable and were simply satisfying their curiosity. On his return to the city of the Merchants hotel, a hundred war riors were engaged in a war dance at the time. A Founder of Towns. It was in 1852 that Colonel Brott, Colonel John H. GETS VALUABLE GROUND IN THE OLD BALL PARK BLOCK T. B. Walker Now Owns West Half—Improvements Sure to Follow. T. B. Walker now owns the west half of the old ball park block, back of the West hotel. The deal, which was announced early in the week as probable, is closed. C. B. Hefelinger retains the east half, and Mr. Walker has the other. Mr. Walker previously owned the 47 feet running along Sixth street; he has acquired the remaining 126x330 feet. When the McDonald Brothers' building was erected at First avenue and Fifth extended across Second avenue. The roads demanded certain provisions in case of fire. These were not agreed to and for this and other reasons the spur was never put in. With the advent of improvements which Mr. Walker contemplates it will be absolutely necessary to have trackway facilities. It is expected that the position of the north part of the city as a wholesale center will be materially strengthened by the carrying out of Mr. Walker's plan to improve his holdings after the plan inaugurated by Major Hefelinger in the McDonald building. BROKEN HEARTED OVER DISGRACE. Special to The Journal. Sioux City, Iowa, April 4.—Mrs. Della Dole, aged 19 years, committed suicide at her home here by taking chloroform. WHAT THE COURT SAYS As to the Loss of the ill-fated Bourgogne. Inasmuch as some criticism has been made in the papers over the management and equipment of the ill-fated Bourgogne, the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, which controls the French line, has sent out a statement based on the decision of Judge Townsend. The copy received by the local agents, A. E. Johnson & Co., is as follows: The petition of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique for limitation of liability to the value of the lifeboat and life raft saved is granted, and the court also decides that no claims for loss of life can be made in a court of admiralty. It also decides that the prepaid freight, passage money and subvention for the voyage are not to be considered as part of the ship and pending freight. The court further decides that the Bourgogne was properly manned and equipped; that she had proper lifeboats, bulkheads, life-saving appliances, that the company had given proper instructions to her captain, and that the company was in no way to blame in fitting her for the voyage. Incidentally, however, while finding the speed of the Bourgogne to have been ten knots (which was the same as found in the Resol case), the court holds that this speed under the American and English law was excessive, though under the French law it is not so. This latter point, however, is not material in view of the result. HEARST KINDERGARTEN REOPENING. Special to The Journal. Lead, S. Last evening the deal which has been announced as under way for several days, was consummated. With increased output, the business will be continued as an auxiliary of the North Star company along with the other branch at Anoka. Fletcher Walker has disposed of his part in the business and will devote his entire attention to lumber interests in the west. W. S. Shaft, who retains a large interest in the business, will continue as manager. The plant will be operated on about the same lines as before. The Shaft-Pierce factory is at Washington and First avenue N. About a year ago the Lathery was brought in from St. Louis Park, where it was established some years ago by Mr. Shaft. Starting with small capital he has increased the output from 150 pairs of over 300 per day and built up a business that attracted the attention of the North Star company and which it found desirable to incorporate with its own plant, at present unequal to the demands of increasing trade. Worthen, after leaving the twin cities, was in business successively in Boston, Chicago and New York, having resided for the past five years in the last-named city.
