

making vivid contrasts with the deep blue of the carpet. As they arrived before the throne they separated, the peers going to the right and the prelates to the left. Even when practically empty the abbey presented an interesting, picturesque effect, the oldest feature of which consisted in every seat being practically covered by a large, white official program, in the center of which was placed a small, deep red book of service.

A Wonderfully Beautiful Scene.
Without the tapestries or light furnishing of the tiers upon tiers of seats, which rose fifty feet high, the combination of white and red programs by itself produced a gala effect. The preliminary eulogies of the decorative arrangements were not over stated. The entire scheme had been carried out harmoniously, and even the stands did not seem out of place. A particularly beautiful effect was presented by the king's and queen's boxes, comprising half a dozen rows of chairs in white satin, relieved only by the crimson of the seats. Beyond the structural decorations for the seating of the guests, the king and queen made little attempt at any display and the old, gray arches lent their stately perspective to the scene, untouched by flags or any gleam of color.

The various chairs to be used by the king and queen in the service attracted special attention, but what inevitably caught the eye was the glittering of the gold plate brought from various royal repositories, ranged along the chancel and behind the altar. Amidst these surroundings the earl marshal, in his ermine robes and heavily embroidered coat, hurried to and fro, directing the final touches.

By 10 o'clock the interior of the abbey presented a scene of unusual splendor. Along the nave, which was lined by grenadiers, every chair was taken up by high officers of the army and navy and others in equally handsome equipment.

On top of the arch separating the nave from the chancel, sat the surplined orchestra. In stalls within, with the other musicians, were the United States ambassador, Joseph H. Choate, and Mrs. Choate and many officials.

During the long wait, Edwin A. Abbey, the American artist, was busy with the easel to paint the coronation scene in the abbey and who wore court uniform, took careful note of the surroundings for the historic picture ordered by the king.

The coronation ceremony was the re-enactment of the coronation of King Edward the Confessor, the last English monarch to be crowned in the abbey. The king and queen were seated on the throne, and the king drew him back and put his arms around him and kissed him. After this the king once more gave the prince the name of his father, King Edward.

The Queen Is Crowned.
The queen then rose, and accompanied by her ladies proceeded to the altar steps where, under a robe of cloth-of-gold she was quickly crowned by the Archbishop of York, supported by the bishops. She then knelt to the throne beside the king and the king and her coronation was accomplished.

The King Not Fatigued.
The departure of the king and queen from the abbey was signaled by another salute, the massed bands playing "God Save the King." The entire route of their majesties' return to the palace was marked by scenes of enthusiasm similar to those which greeted their progress to the abbey, the more circuitous route of the king's illness and Constitution hill giving the hundreds of thousands of persons occupying the stands, windows and roofs an opportunity of greeting the new crowned king and his consort before they re-entered Buckingham palace, which they did in the midst of scenes of remarkable enthusiasm, the entire crowd from Constitution hill downwards joining in singing the national anthem.

The Oath Administered.
The administration of the oath followed standing before the king's chair the archbishop asked:
"Sir, your majesty willing to take the oath?"
And the king answering, "I am willing."
Archbishop—Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the people of this United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the dominions thereto belonging, according to the statutes in parliament agreed on, and the respective laws and customs of the same?
King—I solemnly promise so to do.
Archbishop—Will you to your power cause law and justice, in mercy, to be executed in all your judgments?
King—Will.
Archbishop—Will you to the utmost of your power maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel, and the Protestant reformed religion established by law? And will you maintain and preserve inviolably the settlement of the Church of England, and the doctrine, worship, discipline and government thereof, as by law established in England? And will you preserve unto the bishops and clergy of England, and to the church therein committed to their charge, all such rights and privileges, as by law are established in England?
King—All this I promise to do.
The king answered in firm, strong tones, his replies being easily heard high up in the triforium near the roof. Then the inkstand was brought and the king signed the oath. He did not advance to the altar, but sat in the chair he had occupied since the service began. While the choir sang "Come, Holy Ghost, Our Souls Inspire," the king remained seated, and the queen stood up.

After the archbishop's anointing prayer a gold canopy was brought over the king's chair and his majesty divested himself of his outer robe and then walked to the altar, while the choir sang Sedok's anthem.

Then Comes the Anointing.
The anointing ceremony was scarcely over owing to the canopy. The spectators were just able to discern the Archbishop of Canterbury's motions.
After the prayer the king donned the colobium sindonis, then resumed his seat and from a scarlet silk roll on which the prayers were printed in large type and which was held by the dean of Westminster, the archbishop read the anointing prayer, and delivered the anointing to the king, who did not go to the altar, the sword being taken to him by the Dean of Westminster, while his majesty remained seated. The armilla and the orb were then delivered to the king according to the program.

The Crown Is Placed on His Head.
The archbishop had similar difficulty, owing to the anointing. The placing of the crown on the king's head. In fact, the choir started "God Save the King" while the Archbishop of Canterbury was still striving to place the crown on the ruler's head and great shout went up and the electric lights were turned on.
As the acclamations died away the clanging lyre, the noise of gongs and the shouting of people outside penetrated into the abbey, where the king sat, motionless, his dazzling crown on his head and his scepter held firmly in his hand.

The Archbishop Was Weak.
Having placed the king into his new throne, the archbishop knelt and paid homage, the aged prelate scarcely being able to rise until the king assisted him and himself raised the archbishop's hands from the steps of the throne. The archbishop, who seemed to be in a faint, had practically to be carried to the altar. The incident created considerable excitement and several prelates rushed forward to help the prelate.

The Duke of Norfolk as earl marshal accompanied the representatives of each grade of the nobility read the oath beginning, "I, duke or earl, etc. do become your liege man of life and limb," etc. The respective representatives next touched the king and queen in the sight of the Duke of Norfolk being the only peer to read the oath. This portion of the service was considerably shortened.

College Man Surrenders Work in the Missionary Field to Marry Wisconsin Girl.
Chicago, Aug. 9.—The happy ending of a romance that the objections of the bride's parents threatened to spoil will come next Tuesday night in Janesville, Wis., when Miss Sue Dowell will become the wife of Carlyle V. Hibbard. Both have been prominent in university circles at Northwestern and Wisconsin. Giving up his chosen work in the missionary field in China, the young man succeeded in removing the obstacles to the marriage when the girl he met in college six years ago.

WARRANTS FOR PICKETS
INTIMIDATION IS CHARGED
The Strikers Are Said to Be Standing Firm and Are Orderly.
Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 9.—Warrants have been issued for the arrest of thirty-one striking miners at Kingston, Luzerne borough, and Edwardsville, charged with rioting while doing picket duty in the vicinity of the Woodward breaker of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western colliery. It is alleged that the miners intimidated men who wanted to go to work and turned them back by force. National Board Member John Fallon claims there was no intimidation of any kind.

THE NATION'S CHASTENED MOOD.
London, Aug. 9.—The Times editorially dwells upon the changed feelings and the nation's attitude arising from the postponement of the coronation and the sympathy of the people during the king's illness. It says that if the coronation had been celebrated in June it would have been accompanied by a sentiment akin to that attending the payment of Victoria's diamond jubilee, a sentiment full of national joy and lofty imperial pride. There is now a chastened mood. In any event the coronation of Edward VII. will stand forth in history not only because of the splendid pageant, rich in the symbolism of more than a thousand years, but also because it will record and consecrate a period of trial, disappointment and suspense, now happily terminated, but nevertheless unforgettable in the long story of the British people and its king.

SOME OF THE DETAILS
Program of the Anointing and of the Crowning.
London, Aug. 9.—King Edward and Queen Alexandra were crowned in Westminster abbey shortly after noon today. Though the ceremony was bereft of some of the elaboration and pageantry originally contemplated, it lacked little in the way of spectacular perfection. The whole ceremony was of a magnificently decorative character, and presented a contrast between the grandeur around the two central figures surrounded in their rich robes of velvet, ermine and cloth-of-gold, amidst the distinguished assemblage of actors, the faintest of whose various roles were manifested in constant movement. Each stage of the ceremony, with its old world usages, furnished its quota of interest, while the interior of the noble

AN APPEAL FOR PRISONERS
The Humanitarian League's Request—Many Peers Absent Today.
London, Aug. 9.—It is felt by the Humanitarian League that the hour is propitious for a last appeal for coronation clemency to convicts. Yesterday a passionate petition was addressed to the king to set at liberty all men and women in British prisons whose guilt is open to some measure of doubt or who have already served long terms for comparatively slight offenses.
The king is displeased at the conduct of scores of peers and members of parliament in not reading the prayer for clemency to fill grooms shooting, country house and seaside engagements, made before the present coronation date was fixed. When he learned yesterday of these wholesale departures the king is quoted as having said: "I fear I may be the only English gentleman in London tomorrow."

POPE'S CORDIAL MESSAGE
A Cable Dispatch Received From the Vatican To-day.
London, Aug. 9.—While the coronation was being solemnized in London celebrations and rejoicings were carried out throughout the colonies. The congratulations of European sovereigns also poured in.
Soon after the king's return to the palace the pope sent him an especially cordial message.

Service Held in Berlin.
Berlin, Aug. 9.—The American and British residents here joined in a special service at the English church, almost identical with the service at Westminster Abbey. Among those present were Prince Frederick Leopold, representing Emperor William, Dr. von Muehlen, under secretary of the foreign office, and J. B. Jackson, first secretary of the American embassy. The church was magnificently decorated by the emperor's gardeners.

THEY DON'T WAIT
Aldermen Adjourned Before Mayor Ames' Resignation Arrived.
FITCHETTE BROUGHT IT WITH HIM
He Reports That Dr. Ames' Physical Condition Is Still Most Serious.

The message came too late!
So did the messenger, in the person of that heroic figure, former Police Captain John Fitchette.
The council having finished all routine business at 9 o'clock last evening, refused to heed the courier's departing telegraphic cry from Red Wing for more time. A brief respite was all he asked for.
"Will arrive with Mayor Ames' resignation at 10:40," he wired to Alderman D. P. Jones, acting mayor.
But the aldermen declined to hold the boards for an hour longer, and so far as the intended dramatic climax was concerned, Fitchette's trip to West Baden came to naught. He had planned to do the heroic feat of driving his savior in his hour of need. The council was sadly lacking in the dramatic instinct, and the play to the galleries was off.

The situation would have been no wise altered had Fitchette arrived before the council adjourned. The aldermen had already agreed not to accept the resignation until the council had voted to table it until it became necessary to pass finally upon it. As Alderman Jones explained, there was no occasion for hurry. He said he would drive post haste to the city and the resignation when the council meets Wednesday night.
City Attorney Healy still insists that Mayor Ames' resignation cannot take effect until the council so wills.
"He is mayor," he explained, "until the council accepts his resignation, which will be until just before the November election."

Capt. Fitchette Disgusted.
"Coffee John" was a greatly disgusted individual when he stepped off the Milwaukee train last evening after a hard, dusty, fifty-hour trip only to learn that the council had attached so much importance to his mission, and had declined to await his coming in extraordinary session.
The train left Minneapolis at 5:25 Wednesday evening and reached West Baden at 6:10 Thursday evening. He dispatched all of his business with the mayor and, in possession of the road, returned toward home again at 3 p. m.
Fitchette brought bad tidings as to the mayor's health. He says the "old man" is in bad shape and "nearly all in." He is not only ailing, but his health, the doctor is greatly interested in the preliminary moves now being made in the Minneapolis mayoralty game. The mayor told Fitchette that the Powells had done the disconcerting thing in forcing the resignation of so many officials before the return of Alderman Jones who was expected to head the republican municipal ticket and stand a good chance of winning. He said that Mr. Jones would give the city a "good, sensible, conservative business administration." He thinks Jones and Heinrich will be opposing candidates for mayor in November.

Fitchette explained that his mission to West Baden was purely an unselfish one. He wished to see the city "he explained, "by putting a responsible and legitimate head in the mayor's office. The mayor has a poor opinion of the city. He thinks Ames is a mayoralty candidate. He believes him incapable. I do not believe Powers a fit person to be at the head of our city government. He thinks Ames would make good. He started in to pay his political debts as soon as he had the opportunity."
Fitchette made haste to explain soon after he reached the city that he paid the expenses of his trip out of his own pocket. He declared that he also was a retired man, and that he had induced the mayor to change the date of his resignation from Sept. 6 to Aug. 27 in order to save the city $20,000. He said that he had a special election in mind, which is not shared by City Attorney Healy, who is a special election man, and who would like to see a special election day at very little extra expense to the voters.

Text of the Resignation.
Impaired health and West Baden business are the two chief reasons urged by the mayor for tendering his resignation at the time he did. He said that his resignation was not intended to be a permanent one. His communication to the council reads thus:
West Baden, Ind., Aug. 7, 1902.—To the Honorable City Council of Minneapolis, Minn.—Gentlemen: I hereby resign the position of mayor of the city of Minneapolis, Minn., to take effect and be in force from and after the 27th day of August, 1902. Business arrangements entered into last April make it imperative for me to be here at West Baden in the future, and would prevent my devoting much time as is requisite for the proper transaction of the executive business of Minneapolis.
My impaired health at this time precludes the possibility of my doing more work than that required of me here in business interests. I would have resigned long before this had it not been that such an act would have held the city to about $20,000 expense to have held a special election to fill the vacancy.
As I have now arranged it, your honorable body can plan to hold a special election to fill the vacancy caused by my resignation at the same time the primary election will be held, without additional expense to the taxpayers. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
A. A. Ames.

WATER BONDS APPROVED
Pure Water and Plenty of It Is Thus Assured.
Pure water and plenty of pressure for the high revenue districts of Minneapolis are now assured the action of the city council last evening in adopting the resolution calling for the immediate issue of $250,000 bonds for the improvement of the waterworks system. This will obviate the necessity of operating the lower pumping stations at any future time in any of the revenue districts of the city. The amount thus realized, $40,000 will be applied to the new northeast pumping station. The big expense item will be the cost of distributing mains, giving a direct flowage from the reservoir to Lowry Hill and Prospect Park.

After a lengthy debate as to the disposition to be made of the old city hall, which will soon be tenanted, it was decided to offer it for sale. Bidders will be asked to make a deposit of $2,500 in cash to be applied to the purchase of the property for the central station, which will also be put up at auction.
Alderman Merrill taboed the idea of converting the city hall into a municipal bath house. It would fall of that purpose, he declared, unless bathing, as well as vaccination, was made compulsory. The city of Minneapolis has $500,000 worth of $20,000 to $60,000. He doubted if it would bring anything like the latter figure.
Health Commissioner F. M. Hall asked that the street commission be requested to remove noxious weeds from the vacant lots of the city. These weeds, he said, were responsible for most of the fever prevalent in Minneapolis. The city of St. Barnabas hospital was given permission to erect a three-story brick veranda addition. UEDEMANN IS VICTOR
Takes Western Chess Championship Without a Loss Thus Far.
ELLIOTT MAY GET SECOND PLACE
Next Year's Tournament Will Be Held on Lake Michigan—Chicago Chess Club as Host.

Louis Uedemann, the Chicago expert, is an easy winner of the western tournament at Minnetonka, there being now no chance for him to lose. He is playing his last game with George B. Spencer of St. Paul this afternoon, and whatever the outcome of the game, Uedemann wins the western championship, as he has won sixteen with one draw and has not lost a game to date.
E. P. Elliott of Minneapolis is the probable winner of the second place. He is now in the midst of his game with Hillman of St. Paul, and then has a tug with Hine, the hard knocker from Missouri. On the outcome of these games depends Elliott's rank. He has won 13 games and lost 2 with 1 draw.
Wilcox of Chicago has improved his score since yesterday and stands close to Elliott, with 12 wins, 3 losses and a draw. He has games this afternoon with Judge Smith and Widmeyer.

Judge Hine of Savannah, Mo., has lost a notch since yesterday in the game with Stacy, but has eleven wins against three losses and a draw, and is now on his last game, that with Elliott.
Friedlander and Stacy, the Dakota and Minnesota state champions, are playing this afternoon for the fifth place in the tournament. It is Friedlander's last game. Stacy has a second game to play with Clark.
By 6 o'clock it is probable that the last game of the eighteenth round will be completed, and the tournament concluded.
It has been the most interesting and successful contest yet held in the annals of western chess and has brought out the best play yet seen west of the Alleghenies. Many of the games will be widely published and annotated in the chess columns of the country and be set down as strong and brilliant scientific games.
Next year's tournament will be held on Lake Michigan under the auspices of the Chicago Chess club.
