MICHIGAN
STORAGE BATTERY PLANT
25,000 Horsepower Can Be Held in Reserve at the Soo for Emergencies.

SAULT STE. MARIE, MICH.—One of the most important features of the electrical equipment of the big water power development and one concerning which but few people have been informed will be the storage battery plant, the largest of its kind in the world. It will have capacity for the storage of 25,000 electrical horsepower and will occupy a large section of the upper story of the full operation there will be no need of a certain quantity of surplus energy. For instance, a manufacturing industry may have a contract for a certain volume of horsepower and there will be occasions when it will not be used to the full extent. Here is where the storage battery will come into play. The turbines at the power building will be kept on turning to furnish power for the electrical machinery and the surplus will go to the storage plant, from which it will be available as required for all purposes to which electrical power can be applied. The storage battery will be a mountain of bottled up electricity, at all times in readiness to furnish power, and will add greatly to the capacity of the power plant. In case of an accident which might necessitate the closing down of the plant there will be sufficient stored energy to keep the wheels of the industry revolving for some time, and during the period of operation there will always be a surplus that can be used as desired in various directions.

There is no plant in the world of a similar nature that will approximate capacity to the one to be installed here. It is only within the last two years that the storage of electricity in any large quantity has been made commercially practicable. The company has had correspondence with Edison, the great electrician, who has evinced much interest in the plans here.
