BIG ELEVATOR DEAL

P. R. Marfield, Head of the Brooks-Griffiths Co., Buys 21 County Houses.

They Were the Property of the Independent Co.—Valued at About $100,000.

The largest and most important deal of the year affecting the grain trade of the northwest came to light this morning. The entire property of the Independent Elevator company, consisting of twenty-one county elevators, has been sold to J. R. Marfield, president of the Brooks-Griffiths company. The details of the transaction will not be made public, but the houses represent a valuation of about $100,000 and what else is involved in the trade in the way of stocks of grain and good will does not appear.

A new company of which J. R. Marfield is president and which J. R. Marfield is the head of the Independent Elevator company. This company operates houses in Minnesota and North Dakota, sixteen on the line of the Great Northern and five on the Northern Pacific. These elevators are large for country houses and have a capacity of over 600,000 bushels.

The Brooks-Griffiths company is not concerned in the deal, notwithstanding Mr. Marfield is president of that company. Mr. Bettengen will identify himself with the development of the grain trade in the Canadian northwest to an extent that will make it impossible to give constant attention to his former properties—hence his willingness to dispose of his large interests on the American side.

A new company of which J. R. Marfield will be president will shortly be organized to take over the properties, the headquarters of which will be in Minneapolis.

J. R. Marfield is a comparative stranger in the local field but has long been identified with the grain trade of the northwest and was formerly known principally to the trade by reason of his connection with the Western Elevator company of Winona, Minn. June 1, 1902, Mr. Marfield purchased the interests of the Brooks brothers and of Lester R. Booker, since deceased, in the Brooks-Griffiths company, in addition to holding the presidency of the new company to be formed.

CAN WASTEWATER MILLER'S NO-STRIKE

Supreme Court Decides Against Stillwater Man on Ground of Public Policy.

Respondent Sought to Ruin Spring Which Supplied the City With Water.

On the broad question of public policy the supreme court decided today in favor of the Stillwater Water company, which is suing against Henry Farmer, who is seeking to ruin the spring on which the company depends for supplying the people of Stillwater with pure water for domestic use. He sunk an excavation about ten feet from the spring and laid a pipe for supplying his barn. Although this diminished the spring, he was still within the law when he laid a 10-inch pipe at a lower level and drained off the water into a city sewer main, absolutely wasting it. The books are full of decisions as to a man's absolute right to the water supply on his own soil, the decision of Justice Collins reverses the lower court and grants a new writ to lay down the rule that a land owner must not collect and wantonly waste percolating waters which would otherwise be available for the general welfare of the people. In justification the opinion says:

"The subject of wholesome water for domestic purposes in our cities is fast becoming one of overwhelming importance, and the courts may have to step forward and out of the ordinary rules, in order to protect our citizens and preserve for their use a wholesome and sufficient supply. A great injury must be prevented although time-honored precedents of no value are swept aside."

The syllabus says: "Great injury to the public interest, appellant, vs. Henry C. Farmer, respondent.

First—Except for the benefit and improvement of his own premises, a land owner has no right to drain, collect or divert waters which would otherwise be available for the general public for domestic purposes. He must not drain, collect or divert such waters for the sole purpose of injuring them.

Second—An action may be maintained by a injured party to restrain against such waste. Order reversed and a new trial granted. —Collins, J.

Money for Mother in Finland. Non-resident aliens may recover damages for death or injuries of their next of kin in this country, under the decision of the court in a suit brought against the Commodore Mining company by Alex. Renlund, administrator of the estate of John Erickson. A verdict of $1,000, which will go to Erickson's widowed mother in Finland, is sustained.

Justice Lewis declines to agree with the defendant's contention that the mother cannot be a beneficiary, and says: "We think it more in accordance with the spirit of the age that this statute be construed to have a universal application, and that the mother be restored to the dependent, wherever the place of residence, in some degree, compensation for a loss resulting from an act of negligence committed within the jurisdiction of the court, and that the mother be restored to the dependent, wherever the place of residence, in some degree, compensation for a loss resulting from an act of negligence committed within the jurisdiction of the court, and that the mother be restored to the dependent, wherever the place of residence, in some degree, compensation for a loss resulting from an act of negligence committed within the jurisdiction of the court."

May Sue on the Bonds. Ramsey county may recover for the frauds committed by Walter B. Bonine, former deputy sheriff, for the county's demption and refundment orders. Suits brought against W. R. Johnson, former county auditor, and his bondsmen, are sustained in this case. The district court, which overruled demurrers in all these cases, is sustained, and the cases will go to trial.

Charged to Chippewa County. The town of Louriston, Chippewa county, recovers from the county $239.54 for expenses of caring for the wife and four children of John Cheney, during their quarantine for smallpox. The family had moved from Louriston in March and were taken ill in April. The Louriston people sued Swift county, claiming that the family was a proper charge there, and this view was sustained in the trial court. The supreme court reverses both cases and holds Chippewa county liable. Counting section 7059 of the general statutes of 1894, Justice Lewis holds that a county is liable for those who are actually residents within its borders when quarantined.

Mankato Paving Contract Void. The new contract for paving the case of John Diamond against the city of Mankato, in which a contract with the Barber asphalt company was declared void because of certain conditions. Justice Brown dissents in this case.

Reverses Hennepin Judge. A Hennepin county case is reversed. It is the second appeal of C. C. Joslyn's suit to enforce a contract with Barbara Schwend for the sale of some real estate.

Ramsey County. Two Ramsey county decisions are reversed. Ernest R. Von Heyne, respondent, vs. Thomas S. Tompkins, appellant. Order reversed. George Benz, respondent, vs. City of St. Paul et al., "Plaintiff." Order reversed and a new trial granted.

A "CIVILIZED" RECRUIT

Young Man Who Says He Has Taken Out "Civilization Papers" Is Accepted for the Navy.

He was "civilized," he said, and he was, therefore, accepted to-day as a naval recruit at the federal building where he had already explained that he was of foreign birth. "But I'm civilized," he insisted. "I took out my papers last fall."

This naturalized landsman was one of ten applicants examined before 11 o'clock to-day. Twenty-five men and boys were examined yesterday. Since the recruiting began here Monday morning 143 applicants have been examined and have been accepted. Within the same period thirty-five applicants have been examined at St. Paul.

The $100,000 cash and free right-of-way will enable the company to bond for the remaining amount needed.

How an Indiana Editor Landed in the Place for Which Hay Was Mentioned.

Position of Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department, soon to be vacated by Judge Vandeventer. It is still believed that he could have secured the position if Senator Nelson had been at liberty to urge the matter. But Mr. Nelson had other matters on hand, and felt that he could not take Mr. Hay's case upon this decision was rendered without any disturbance of the pleasant relations which exist between the two men.

The northwest may have some interest in knowing how the appointment happened to go to Judge Francis S. Campbell, Ohio, until that time assistant secretary of the interior. It was a case of another "personal" appointment by the president, without consulting with the senators interested, or with anybody else.

The editor of the Lafayette, Ind., Journal is Melville W. Miller, a good republican, but not an active political worker, and hardly known among the Indiana faithful. Miller and Judge Vandeventer, who is vacating the position of attorney general for the interior, were classmates at DePauw university a number of years ago. Last summer Vandeventer met Miller during a visit to Indiana, and was desirous of making the conversation that ensued to keep his eyes open in Washington and give Miller the benefit of any information he might get in the way of openings for public office. Last week Judge Vandeventer happened to recall that conversation and request, and straightway he sat down at his desk in the interior department, and in the name of Secretary Hitchcock, suggesting that it would be a capital thing to have Judge Campbell transferred to which appointment by the president, the place he (Vandeventer) was about to vacate. There was reason for the suggestion, because Campbell is a good lawyer, and has made himself familiar with much of the interior department work, and the office of the assistant attorney general for the interior department. Secretary Hitchcock thought the suggestion an excellent one, and asked the president to make the transfer, which was ordered at once. Then Judge Vandeventer sat down at his desk again and wrote a note to the president, suggesting an excellent man for the position, to fill the place to be vacated by Campbell, he couldn't do better than to name Miller. In this connection, the president stated that the suggestion as he had on the previous one from Secretary Hitchcock, and sent an identical note to Senators Fairbanks and Miller. The president was not to be moved by the suggestion, and he proposed to appoint Miller assistant secretary of the interior department. Neither senator had ever heard of Miller, and the president was not to be moved by the suggestion to ask if Judge Crumpacker, representing the Lafayette district, knew him. Crumpacker knew that there was such a man and that the president was not to be moved by the suggestion to ask if Judge Crumpacker, representing the Lafayette district, knew him. Crumpacker knew that there was such a man and that the president was not to be moved by the suggestion to ask if Judge Crumpacker, representing the Lafayette district, knew him.

While consenting to the Miller appointment on the surface, neither Indiana senator liked it very well, for each has a long waiting list of names for the position, and it will be difficult to explain to them how it is that Miller got a $4,000 job when they can't get anything. No word from Buckman.

No word has been received here from Representative Van Hook, who is expected to be made a member of the house committee on District of Columbia, but it is assumed he is coming December, he will see a great light and undergo a change of heart.

Seth Bullock Conspicuous. One of the conspicuous figures at the White House musicale last Tuesday night was Seth Bullock of South Dakota, rough rider fame, who with his wife has been visiting in Washington for some time. He had a conspicuous place at the president's right hand, and was introduced to all of the distinguished guests in a way to show that he stands high in the president's favor. When the president wasn't introducing him he was slapping him on the back and talking to him in a vigorous fashion, or leaning on his shoulder. It is even said that the president put his right arm around Captain Bullock's neck and talked to him in a friendly way during the evening; all of which tended somewhat to make people think that it was Bullock and not the president who was the center of attraction. Mrs. Bullock was also very conspicuous, and attracted much attention which her husband received.

A Slight Unpleasantness. Senators Nelson and Hansbrough were on opposing sides of the statehood fight, as they were on opposing sides of the right to amend the constitution. The unpleasantness created between the two gentlemen by the McKenzie war still remains.
