Psoriasis

Thousands of people afflicted with this hideously disfiguring disease are daily suffering the most excruciating mental anguish, believing they are doomed to carry its awful scaling blotches until death relieves them. The medical profession, and the greatest skin specialists of the world have always considered the disease as absolutely incurable.

Now positively cured by that wonderful medicament known as

The D. D. D. Remedy

MR. W. B. JENNISON, of the National Express Co., Chicago, Ill., suffered the horrible and agonizing tortures of this disease for more than twenty years. The best skin specialists of Chicago, New York and Philadelphia pronounced his case as incurable. The terrible blotches of this disease had covered his face, head, hands and entire body. His appearance was so repulsive that he had not been able to attend any social or public gathering for years. Mr. David Robinson, head clerk of the Peoples Drug Store in Chicago, who had cured himself of a bad case of psoriasis of ten years standing, with the D. D. D. Remedy, prevailed upon him to try this preparation. Mr. Jennison, speaking of his treatment with this marvelous medicine says:—"I commenced the use of the D. D. D. Remedy, and during the first two months I saw little, if any improvement, but was persuaded by Mr. Robinson to continue its use. I persevered in using the remedy, and I now devoutly thank God that I did. For the first time in twenty years I am free from the awful, scaling blotches of this terrible disease. Once more I am free from the bondage of these tortures of hell, and can again make a presentable appearance before my fellow men. I earnestly beg every sufferer from a disease of the skin to immediately begin treatment with the D. D. D. Remedy. Use it—persevere with it—stick to it—and you will find that it will cure you. Specialists said I had the worst case ever recorded. I know that what cured me will cure anyone."

We unhesitatingly give this remedy our highest endorsement. The marvelous and effective work; the wonderful cures it is making in this community are simply astonishing.

Difficult to Get Public Men to Talk of Aught but the Railroad Question.

McKinley and Dingley Tariffs Hurt Canada Bitterly for a Time—Conditions Adjusted Now.

From a Staff Correspondent. Ottawa, Aug. 21.—The people of Canada are not paying serious attention to reciprocity or to any other question not directly connected with the fate of the peninsular railway bill and its probable effect on the liberal ministry. I have labored earnestly to induce public men to discuss reciprocity with me, but with only partial success. They start out well, and with fair intentions, but before going far they nearly always turn to the Grand Trunk Pacific proposition, and with that as an opening, proceed to analyze the present political situation as related to that measure exhaustively. By the time I am able to get them back on the reciprocity question it is time for them to attend to some matter of business, or they are called away by messenger. Once parliament is out of the way, however, reciprocity, in my opinion, must at least, will press to the fore front, and then we ought to know whether it is the purpose of the premier to reopen the correspondence with Senator Dingley and assent to a reconvening of the joint high commission in Washington during the fall months. As I have previously stated, the correspondence is not being resumed, there is shortly to be an appeal to the country. The question of appeal will hinge entirely on the extent of the bill as defined, and the prospect for its passage is not better than it was last week. It has been estimated that the Grand Trunk Pacific bill will take at least an hour for the most of this week. Its passage thru that body is conceded, but there are many members who desire to be heard, and since there is no such thing as "leave to print" remarks not actually delivered on the floor, the only way members can get before their constituents with prepared speeches is by speaking out in those speeches. In the senate the bill will also be debated at some length. It will pass that body, also, so the leading conservatives now concede. The bill, however, has been pushed ahead several notches since my first reports were made, and while it is still possible, and perhaps probable, that the enactment will come as early as this week in September, there are many who now incline to fix October first as the date. There are several important matters to come up following the passage of the railway bill, among them being the bill to reappoint the membership of the house. Several of the budgets are also to be completed. It will thus be seen that the government will not come as early as has been expected in the United States.

Canadians on Reciprocity. In one of the restaurant rooms in the basement of parliament house at luncheon today were several members of the house and several politicians, not members. The party was largely conservative, but there were several liberals present. The conversation turned for a time on the United States and the question of reciprocal relations with Canada. The talk was not altogether friendly to the United States, but what was said was without malice. It was in Canada, as in the United States, public men are not wholly agreed regarding the immediate need for reciprocity, and are not as a whole prepared to accept it without reservation. I shall put the table talk into quotation marks, as if coming from one man.

In 1891, to go back no farther, there was strong sentiment in Canada in favor of closer trade relations with the United States, which was our near neighbor, and which we were already doing a large and increasing business. When the charge was made at that time that reciprocity would probably mean annexation, there was a great deal of protest. Reciprocity was an issue in an election held at about that time, and so favorably was it regarded that Sir John McDonald, the prime minister of the government by a very slender margin. And he would not have done that had it not been for his tremendous personal popularity in the United States, and the weight of his popularity into the scale against reciprocity, adding that he was again to retire from public life, and the parliament was to be dissolved. I would probably be his last. I will remember his words when speaking of closer trade relations with the American nation and ultimate annexation: "As far as I am concerned, I am English; I am by birth; English I shall remain until the last."

Effect of American Tariffs. "While this friendly sentiment was at flood tide here, came the McKinley tariff law, and in America, and in England, I am by birth; English I shall remain until the last."

"Those tariffs hurt us tremendously. temporarily. We had been trading almost exclusively with the United States, and the fact had then other markets worthy the name. Our larger trade with the mother country came thru dire necessity as the direct result of those tariff enactments. For a time as I have said, we had no market for the hay of Quebec, the dairy products and the lumber of Ontario, and for other staples which I need not mention. Quebec in time opened an English market for her hay, and Ontario opened a market there for her dairy products, better in the long run than the market in America, and the English land buys a large share of its butter and eggs and practically all of its cheese from us. In retaliation, we placed an export duty on Canadian lumber, and stopped the operation of lumbermen from the northern peninsula of Michigan, who had been rafting logs across Georgian Bay to their American mills. These lumbermen have since that time established large mills in Canada, and the country on the north shore of the bay is doing more business than ever. It could have done under any other arrangement."

"During this time there grew up over the Dominion a feeling that the United States was not our friend, and did not care for our trade."

Liberals Forced to Shift. "While the events I have just been narrating were happening, the liberal party of Canada came into power. Traditionally in favor of closer American trade, and having lost the campaign against Sir John McDonald, already referred to, partly on that issue, it began to try to take a position in favor of American trade. It did not do so, but it was not an easy task. First, it advocated direct reciprocity, covering everything; then it suggested that it might be willing to favor absolute free trade between the countries, at least in all natural products. It was driven from one position to another, and did not take a firm stand until within very recent times, when it again spoke as the friend of a limited reciprocity, in which attitude it has had more or less support."

senate. The country as a whole doesn't care whether the joint high commission meets or not, or what it does when it meets, so sure as they that ratification in Washington will be out of the question. If a treaty is framed, however, it will not be until after certain concessions have been made to Canada regarding natural products.

"Since 1891 we have established a thriving trade with Great Britain in goods which formerly were a market in America, and Secretary Chamberlain's proposed preferential, while it may never amount to anything practical, is at the same time sufficiently encouraging to prevent our hasty action on our part. We probably should be unwilling to make with the United States, or with any other power, any important treaty, until we were more definitely advised regarding the outlook for the Chamberlain proposition. Already that proposition has had an important effect in this country. It has stopped all talk of an abolition of the 33-1-3 per cent preferential which we have been giving British goods."

Tariff Against United States Wanted. "Concurrently with the situation as here set forth, there has sprung up in Canada a strong sentiment, and it is growing, in favor of a high tariff against the United States. People who are in the habit of going to the United States; if you'll trade with us, we'll trade with you; but not otherwise. We buy from the United States each year, more in value than we sell to them, and we want a tariff for the equalization of the accounts, and for the fostering and developing of Canadian home industries. If a high tariff has worked well in the United States, and we are prepared to believe that it has, for we have the evidences of it before us, it will work well in Canada. At least, an increasing number of our people want to try it. In my judgment, if a reciprocity treaty should fall at this time, the party in power here will submit a high tariff proposition to the country before three years. When submitted, it will be overwhelmingly endorsed."

Chamberlain Preferential in the Way. "There is sentiment in this country in favor of the one-time policy of the liberals—free trade between the countries for a definite period of time, covering a definite number of articles. I fancy that
