VERMONT MAKES EMBARRASSMENT

DEMOCRATIC EXPLANATION DE-PARTMENT IS OVERBURDENED.

Arkansas Adds to the Discomfiture of

New York, Sept. 10.—The talk about September elections as political barometers has been followed by embarrassment in the explanation department rassment in the explanation department of the democratic national committee. For this the committee itself is to blame. It assumed that the reorganized, the "safe and sane," democracy, would sweep the country. It felt sure of important gains, even in strong republican states, and accordingly it laid greater stress than ever before upon the significance of the Vermont election. It was a great mistake to advertise and emphasize the Vermont contest in such a way. The democratic managers had counted too heavily upon the lovalty of the former free silver republicans and upon the return of the former gold democrats. In Vermont the majority of these appear to have voted majority of these appear to have voted the republican ticket. They counted, too, on a hearty support from labor, but were disappointed here also, for in the labor centers of the state the republican majorities were as large as ever be-

Washington luncheon, negroes had been mobbed and burned, and the white population seemed of one mind. The mistake of the democracy was in not making greater allowances for the following of Bryan. In two national campaigns this now discredited leader had gone up and down the country preachgone up and down the country preach-ing his doctrine. His eloquence, his earnestness, the conditions of the times, all combined to give him a hearing. He made many converts. The St. Louis convention this year threw Bryan and convention this year threw Bryan and his theories overboard. Instead of quiet acquiescence, his friends are in a condition of sullen revolt. If what he said to the country in 1896 and again in 1900 was true then; if the democratic party of that day accepted it and put it into platform and campaign speech: it into platform and campaign speech if it was then worthy of serious thought —what is the matter with it now? That is the question which Bryan dem ocrats are everywhere asking.

It is hardly necessary to say that at republican headquarters there is intense interest in the returns from Vermont and Arkansas. The "straw" is so and Arkansas. The "straw" is so much more significant than had been counted on, and the outlook now seems so much improved, that the leaders now look for Roosevelt's electoral and popular pluralities to be on a par with Mc-Kinley's. One of the republican managers attributes. Tuesday's results in gers attributes Tuesday's results in part to the campaign of abuse which the democrats are making against the president. The country knows him president. The country knows him well and it knows that the democratic charges are untrue. This manager also thinks that the fact that Judge Parker is unknown has helped. The country is not inclined to elect a man it doesn't Republicans Cheer Up.

Inbor centers of the state the republican majorities were as large as ever before.

From the beginning the democrats seemed confident of holding the republican plurality in Vermont down to 20,000. The republicans, on the other hand, had set 25,000 as the size of their victory. Neither side was well informed. The actual result, which is near 33,000, shows that Roosevelt will sweep the country in November by a plurality that will compare favorably with that given McKinley four years ago. It also shows that the note sounded in Oregon last spring has echoed from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and that it was no mere local phenomenon.

Disappointment in Arkansas.

Democratic disappointment with the result in Arkansas is a typical southern state. It is a part of the 'solid south,' and the campaign there is the same as that being made elsewhere in that region. There are, in Vermont, the silver democrats, the old Bryanites, remaining away from the polls. Not only that, but the republican vote has been radically increased. Counties were carried by the republican in Arkansas which never the state is a reception comes next week.

In former years the politicians looked upon Maine with as much interest as upon Vermont, but that has changed. GREAT BATTLE

WAS FOUGHT.

The Battle Begins. On Aug. 28 the Japanese front came in contact with the Russian outposts, who retired. The Japanese on the 27th found the Russians holding strong in-trenched positions on high, rocky hills south of An-shan-shan. They replied south of An-shan-shan. They replied fiercely to a heavy cannonade of the Japanese, while infantry spent the day assuming positions in a corn-covered plain at the foot of the hills and install-ing a telephone to the staff from the trenches in preparation for a general at-the second and twelfth divisions with the imperial guard.

The whole great force was under Mar-trenches in preparation for a general attack.

Firing began at daybreak on the 28th. The Russian batteries were admirably concealed and assisted by a balloon, which rose high above the hilltop. The correspondents and attaches were placed several miles distant, seeing only the tufts of shrapnel smoke and hearing the thunder of guns. They were kept in complete ignorance of the day's operations by the staff.

In the middle of the afternoon, with a powerful glass I saw the Japanese infantry, like brown ants, on the crest of one hill waver along the skyline and disappear towards the twilight of a great burst of Russian fire, indicating their further retreat.

disappear towards the twilight of a great burst of Russian fire, indicating their further retreat.

The Japanese occupied An-shan-shan that night, and the outposts pushed forward to the Sa river, seven miles from the Russian position at Shusampo. The 29th was spent at An-shau-shan.

I then decided to make for the front, as it was impossible to do any work under the conditions obtaining. On the 30th, when the correspondents set out in charge of three officers, I seized my chance at a bend in the road and galloped north. Hard riding brought me Russian position.

They used the Chinese tower and balloon for directing their fire.

The Japanese Formation.

The Japanese second army formed on the left, their line being in the corn, which hid thousands of infantry marching in single file and also enabled the batteries to take their positions. The Ta-ku-shan army was also part of the center, while the first army to the center. While the first army to the northeast was on the right, evidently in view of a great flanking movement. The total Japanese force was about 150,000, and the Russians 100,000. Such was the disposition of the forces that Wonderful Infantry Charges.

The firing continued in one unabating oar as long as daylight lasted, increasing terribly at 6, when the Japanese made their first infantry charge upon 'Green Hill.' Some of the Japanese reached the trenches and engaged the Russians in a hand-to-hand fight, but in a body were beaten back, taking cover in the first line of trenches where they the first line of trenches, where they in the first line of trenches, where they waited the whole night thru.

This was the first of a series of infantry charges uphill, all undertaken with superb bravery by the Japanese. Their method was to subdivide companies into parties of fifteen or twenty, who, extending their formation on command, would rush forward a certain distance and then drop without firing. The result of a series of such sharp rushes is to bring the men to the hill-top unexhausted, tho the losses are greater.

"Rocky Hill" was carried at noon on the 30th by men of the Ta-ku-shan army. The "Redoubt" fell later the same day, while "Green" and "Scrub" hills were taken in a night charge of terrible ferocity by men of the Secondarmy. Certainly the infantry's achievement was wonderful, ranking the Japanese among the world's best. The last Russians retreated from Shu-sam po before daybreak of Sept. 1.

A Grisly Scene.

When we rode over the field the When we rode over the field the scene was unforgettable. Trenches were heaped full of Russian and Japanese killed, piled one on the other. They covered paths and even the shelters were full of dead. Over all buzzed millions of flies. A Dramatic Incident.

A Dramatic Incident.

At 3 in the afternoon, while I stood on a rocky ridge, there was an intensely dramatic incident. I had mounted the ridge of a trench, but was called back by several Japanese officers, one of whom eried: "Russians in that hole will shoot you," pointing to the corner of a trench covered by sandbars.

It appears that at noon the previous day, when the ridge was taken, seven Russians took refuge in a hole, whence they fired and maintained a sturdy resistance. The Japanese flung down sandbags to cover the entrance and left a guard during the night. In the morning the Russians fired thru a small gap, wounding two officers who tried AN EYE-WITNESS TELLS HOW IT Fiercest Struggle of Modern Times, Lasting Ten Days, Is Described by an American War Correspondent, Who left a guard during the Russians fired thru a small morning the Russians fired thru a small gap, wounding two officers who tried to parley with them. As we waited, a bayonet was poked from among the bags as a sign of surrender. This was able as well as effective medicine. This was followed by six others, which were handed clear out and the bags then removed. Slowly the Russians emerged into the sunlight after being pent up twenty-seven hours. They stared dully at the circle of wondering faces. Of the seven, four were badly wounded. It was pathetic to watch how tenderly they were helped by a Cossack weartsin, Sept. 8, says:

I have just made seventy miles on horseback thru a heavy storm, passed sixteen hours in a Chinese open boat, sixteen hours in a Chinese open boat, and walked twenty miles to send you the story of the great nine days' battle, ending in the capture of Liao-yang by the Japanese.

After a long wait at Hai-cheng the second army under General Oku, consisting of the third, fourth and sixth divisions, moved north to co-operate with General Nozu's army, which had landed at Ta-ku-shan, comprising the fifth and tenth divisions, and also with the first army under General Kuroki, comprising the second and twelfth divisions with

It was pathetic to watch how tenderly they were helped by a Cossack wearing a red cross.

Now it is evident that this line of five hills is but the first of three lines of defense around Liao-yang, which city is seen in the distance. All day the first Japanese army advanced with but little shelling and being shelled by the Russian batteries on ridges three miles south of the city.

Kurcki Was Late.

It is evident the renewal of Kuroki's flanking movement has failed, while the dispatch of the tenth division to reindispatch of the tenth division to reinforce him indicated that the Russians held him well. Thruout Sept. 2 there was continued firing by the advance Japanese infantry, who took more ridges in a twilight attack. This apparently made little difference in the situation, for the Russian defense of the third position was magnificent, and the non-arrival of General Kuroki seriously affected the Japanese.

Staff reports to correspondents are meager and obviously untrue, speak.

meager and obviously untrue, speak-ing of the "panic-stricken enemy," while, as a matter of fact, the Japan-ese were absolutely held at bay by the admirable Russian batteries. The Russian settlement at Liao-yang is outside the city wall to the southwest. It is the city wall to the southwest. It is grouped round the railway station and protected in a manner to excite the highest praise of engineering experts.

This position of affairs lasted for two full days, the Japanese artillery and infantry fire seeming to have no effect on the devoted Russian defenders. Sometimes the Russian battery seemed silenced and all thought it the beginning of the end. But soon it broke out again with salvos of great effect. From their redoubt the Russian infantry poured upon the Japanese waiting in trenches and met a terrible fire. From time to time the Japanese charged forward, only to be flung back and decimated by a hail of bullets.

Awful Carnage.

Awful Carnage.

Thus the awful carnage persisted Thus the awful carnage persisted thru Sept. 2, 3 and into the morning of the 4th. Just before noon of the 4th flames shot up from the railway building and spread with awful rapidity, belching great columns of smoke which hid even the celebrated pagoda. But even from the smoke the Russian batteries hurled death at the enemy. Yet the Japanese infantry was creeping the Japanese infantry was creeping steadily near and nearer, while the Rus-sian fire seemed slackened. As the day declined never was there a more magnificent battle picture than the great plain made as the sinking sun was buried amid flames and roar of guns. Darkness fell and the Russian batteries were silenced, the from the city came a dropping rifle fire.

Shu-sam-po is on a line of five hills.

I named the first 'Gibraltar,' as it is a great rocky eminence, crowned with a Chinese town; the second, 'The Redoubt,' slightly in front of 'Gibraltar,' and heavily held by Russian artillery and infantry; the third, 'Green Hill,' the fourth 'Scrub Hill,' and the fifth 'Rocky Rodge.'

On all, as on 'The Redoubt,' the Russians had protected those points most easy for infantry attack by mines, pits, stakes and wire entanglements. They also had cut all the tall corn for 400 yards from the base of the hills. They used the Chinese tower and a treed a rifled city.

The Russian retreat must have been The Russian retreat must have been orderly in the extreme, for nothing was left. All provisions and railway material had been taken away.

A high British officer said to me: "I believe now that the strategy of this war has just begun."
The Japanese casualties, on a conservative estimate, foot up 20,000, those of the Russians 15,000.
