OLD-TIME MANNERS
 The Dress of Men and Women in the Reign of George I.
 In "Social England" the following appears as indicating the exaggerated courtship of fashionable people early in the eighteenth century: "Chesterfield teaches that it is horrid to congratulate a friend on his approaching marriage with mere 'I wish you joy,' when he should have said: 'Believe me, my dear sir, I have scarcely words to express the joy I feel upon your happy alliance with such and such a family.'"

The 'compliment of condolence' on a bereavement should be, not 'I am sorry for your loss,' but 'I hope, sir, you will do me the justice to be persuaded that I am not insensible to your unhappiness; that I take part in your distress, and shall ever be affected when you are so.' His child began his lessons in 'breeding' at 9 years old, having then learned Latin, Greek, French, history and geography. He is warned to beware of using proverbial sayings in his speech, such as 'One man's meat is another man's poison,' or 'Every one to his taste,' as the good man said when he kissed the cow. He must attend the graceful motion of his arms, the manner of putting on his hat and giving his hand. Horace Walpole's entrance into a room is described by an eye witness as 'in the style of affected delicacy which fashion has made almost natural. Chapeau bras, between his hands, as if he wished to compress it, or under his arm, and feet on tiptoes as if afraid of a wet floor.' During the reign of King George I, Lord Heroey, a cultured man, gave this description of the fine dress of a distinguished woman: "The Duchess of Queensberry's clothes pleased me most; they were white satin embroidered, the bottom of the petticoat brown hills, covered with all sorts of weeds, and every breadth had an old stump of a tree that ran up almost to the top of the petticoat, broken and ragged and worked with brown chenilles, round which twined nasturtiums, ivy, honey-suckles, periwinkles, convolvuses and all sorts of twining vines, which spread and covered the petticoat. Many of the leaves were finished in gold and part of the stumps of the trees looked like the gliding of the sun. At the same period, says the author of "Social England," a fashionable gentleman ordinarily "wore a toupée of curls raised high over his forehead. For daily wear most gentlemen were dressed like George I.—dark tie, wig, plain coat, waistcoat and breeches of stuff colored cloth, and stockings of the same color; for ceremony like Horace Walpole, in a lavender suit, the waistcoat embroidered with a little silver, or of white silk embroidered in the famous frame, partridge silk stockings, gold buckles, ruffles, lace frill and powdered wig. The linen for shirts was bought in Holland, costing from 10 to 14 shilling the English ell. MIRACULOUS. Philadelphia Press. "Your new cook's an immigrant, isn't she? Just landed." "Yes, she's an immigrant, but she'll be an emigrant soon, just like the others, I expect."

SNIDE LIGHTS ON HISTORY. Chicago Journal. On his twenty-first birthday Julius Cesar was figuring how he stood. "By Bacchus!" he exclaimed, biting the end of his stylus perplexedly. "I owe more than a million sesterces!" "Boy," he cried, "tell the coachman to hitch up the brougham. I must call on Andrew Carnegie's lawyers." Which showed that Julius managed to keep up with the times. Napoleon was about to visit Moscow and the inhabitants of the Russian capital were in a blaze of excitement over the Corsican's approach.

For Napoleon had been thoughtful enough to send A. Toxin Worm, the press agent, ahead of him. SPOILING IT. Philadelphia Press. Miss Elly—Jack Hanson was telling me about a romantic adventure he had at the party last night. It seems he bumped into a girl in a dark hallway and kissed her, and he doesn't know yet. Miss Elders—O, tee-hee! That was I. Miss Elly—What? O, for goodness' sake, don't tell him now. Let him love his romance.
