

Social Circles

The wedding of Miss Maude Hubbard Chamberlain and Dr. William Niven was quietly solemnized yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the home of the bride's brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Howard B. Chamberlain, 517 Eleventh avenue SE. The bride has been for three years in charge of the musical department of the St. Cloud normal school, and during her stay in St. Cloud she was also director of the music in the Episcopal church. She was prominent in both musical and social circles and was an active member of the Ladies' Reading Room society. When she was in Minneapolis, Miss Chamberlain had her home with her parents.

A group of thirty-five relatives and near friends gathered to witness the service, which was read by Rev. Mr. Farshaw of St. Cloud, who used the ring service. The appointments were charmingly simple and the decorations were all in white and green, with the exception of clusters of La France roses, which gave a delicate glow to the improvised altar of palms and Easter lilies. Narcissus blossoms were thru the marriage room, while the living room was bright with carnations and ferns. The same color scheme was carried out in the dining room, where hyacinths and ferns formed the centerpiece. The table was set with white satin, ribbon was festooned from the chandelier to the corners of the table and the lights were shaded to simulate big white flowers. The guests were informally greeted by Messrs. and Mrs. Howard B. Chamberlain, W. B. Chamberlain and A. E. Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. Carlyle Scott furnished the bridal music and played "Traumerer" on the piano and violin for the processional and the Mendelssohn march at the close of the service. Miss Frances Chamberlain was the maid of honor. She wore a pretty white gown and carried glowing meadow roses. The bride's gown was of pongee, in the fashion of the evening, trimmed with heavy lace, and her flowers were bride roses. She wore as an ornament a handsome intaglio of pink coral, the gift of the bride's father, William McMillen was best man and the bride was given in marriage by H. B. Chamberlain.

An informal reception followed the service and among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Chamberlain of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew C. Robertson and Mrs. John McElroy of St. Cloud, As Dr. and Mrs. Niven went away through the bride's relative, they were accompanied by Miss Agnes Niven.

Dr. and Mrs. Niven went east and they will visit several of the eastern cities before they sail from New York Feb. 2, for a trip to Egypt and the Mediterranean. They will spend the spring in Italy and France and then go to England and Scotland to spend the summer in the Highlands with Dr. Niven's relatives. They expect to be away about a year.

Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop Lawrence entertained at a dinner on Tuesday evening at their home in Kenwood for Miss Dibble of Marshall, Minn. Red tapers and flowers made the table pretty. After dinner there was a party at the Metropolitan theater, with Judge and Mrs. J. W. Fiehnout of St. Paul, Miss Dibble, George Bookstaber, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Levering and Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence as guests.

The Misses Alice and Cora Carpenter gave a parcel shower Saturday afternoon for Miss Alice Lyman, a bride of Wednesday. The decorations were in pink and green foliage, and streamers were used with pretty effect. Games and music were the order of the evening and a light luncheon was served.

Mrs. T. M. Arundell gave a reception for fifty guests Saturday evening at the home of her mother, Mrs. E. P. Davis, 3002 Fourth street SE. Ferns, palms and carnations made the rooms pretty. Music and games were the diversions. Mrs. Arundell will leave shortly for Texas and during the evening William McFarlane presented her with a purse, the gift of H. J. Dahl & Co., where she has been employed the past ten years.

NO LABOR UNIONISTS

Chicago Minister Argues Against Teachers Siding with Unions.

The Englewood Woman's club is a Chicago suburb, at its last meeting discussed the new city charter. Rev. R. A. White presented the subject, and going so far as to stir up the teachers, who had been invited to be present.

Dr. White made the following suggestions:

"That a part of the building fund be diverted to the teaching fund."

"That tenure of office for teachers be put into effect."

"That legislation be passed in favor of a pension law."

"That the merit system for the appointment and promotion of teachers be established."

"That no teacher shall be permitted, directly or indirectly, to become a member of a labor union."

The last two sections of this category were a challenge to the teachers who had been invited to attend.

"In a democratic state, a public servant must serve the commonwealth and not a part of it," said Dr. White.

"The teachers are employed by the entire public to serve the entire public and to teach the children of the entire public. They are not employed by a corporation that is trying to wrest the last bit of work out of them."

"Is it right for them deliberately to affiliate with a section of the public? It is undemocratic, unwise and should not be permitted. To look upon everything from the standpoint of labor alone is to look upon the culture of a broad, comprehensive social outlook that makes for the best teacher. Suppose the teachers should join an employers' association, what would laboring men think of the school without malice toward the labor world? If I should leave my pulpit I probably should join a labor union, as I was brought up to."

Officers Installed.

Minneapolis have No. 60, L. O. T. M., installed the following officers at their meeting last week: Charlotte Beveridge, president; Virginia Tolson, lieutenant commander; Belle Youngblood, past commander; Sarah Mitchell, recorder; Nellie Eckers, financial; Nellie Cooper, chaplain; Annie Recore, mistress-at-arms; Halie Ward, sergeant; Anna Floquist, sentinel; Bernice Wadeigh, picket. Miss Mabel Aagaard, daughter of the state commander, Mrs. A. W. Walch, acting as officers and later gave a talk. Miss Teoro was presented with a beautiful bouquet of carnations tied with the colors of the state flag. Mrs. Youngblood, the retiring lady commander, was presented with a handsome opal ring. The floor work was done by Philomathean guards. A dainty luncheon was served and several vocal and instrumental selections were given after the installation.

THIRTY-ONE YEARS ON WAY

Old Letter Finally Reaches Its Destination at Moorhead.

MOORHEAD, MINN.—Postmaster E. L. Moorhead has received a letter from a woman at Winchener, Maine, asking for information concerning James McGowan. Her letter brought to light a peculiar instance of carelessness nowhere in the post office department. The letter was written by James McGowan and dated Feb. 1, 1874, and mailed from this city. It has been in the post office for years and its destination and has probably been for years in the hands of the postmaster at various transfer offices between this city and Massachusetts town. The woman says that McGowan was a saloonkeeper on State street, and that he died many years ago.

The case of Ole Molstad, charged with murder in the first degree, was taken up this morning in district court. Molstad is charged with having struck Olaf Larson on the head, on the evening of Sept. 29, thereby causing his death. W. B. Douglas will assist the defense in the prosecution, and Mayor C. A. Nye will defend Molstad.

DR. GERMAIN NOT GUILTY

Murder Trial at Moorhead Ends in Defeat of State.

MOORHEAD, MINN.—The jury in the Dr. Germain murder trial in district court brought in a verdict not guilty for the county. The doctor was acquitted on the ground that the fact that James Gallagher, the dead man, had been in the hospital in Barneville with Dr. Germain and English until late seen by witnesses, and that the suggestion was that he was dragged by Dr. Germain and later dragged through sand and ashes, leaving plain marks.

KILLED IN TRACY'S YARDS

TRACY, MINN.—L. Mitzner was killed last night about 8 o'clock in the railroad yards. He was moving his household goods from Cornland to Relston, and was going to his car when he was run down by a switch engine. His head was almost severed from his body and his legs were crushed. He was 49 and leaves a wife and six children.

AGRICULTURE IN RURAL SCHOOLS

PROF. WM. HAYS POINTS OUT NEED OF SUCH WORK.

Holds That Minnesota Is Ideal Field for First Trial of the Plan—Says Present System of School Work Tends to Fit for City Rather Than Country Life.

Professor William H. Hays, assistant secretary of agriculture, but until recently connected with the state school of agriculture at St. Anthony park, strongly indorses the plan of introducing practical agriculture into the rural schools throughout the country. He intends to use the influence of his position to promote the starting of such a system of schools. He believes Minnesota to be the ideal field for the first trial of the plan.

Professor Hays has written the following article for The Journal in explanation of his ideas:

"I believe that the consolidation of rural schools and the development of agricultural instruction in consolidated rural schools, and agricultural high schools, is the most important agricultural matter up for solution in America. I am not alone in the belief that Minnesota is in the most advantageous position of any state in the union to lead in the solution of this matter."

The institution at St. Anthony Park has succeeded in developing practical education for the country boys and girls who are to return to the farm; and the people of the state are ready to follow the lead of Dean Liggett and his staff of practical instructors. Most people here do not comprehend the significance of the fact that agricultural education has passed the experimental stage and is an assured success. The system of agricultural colleges started by Senator Hays in his and grant bill of 1862 has won a most important place in American education.

"Next to the experiment of agricultural colleges, the inauguration of agricultural education in Minnesota agricultural high school is the most far-reaching experiment in the advancement of American agriculture."

Changing the System.

"While the agricultural colleges, generally, educate men and women for professional agricultural work, this school has grandly opened up a new way of educating the boys and girls who are to remain in farm life. While nearly all of our rural school system serve as avenues off the farm into city life, the Minnesota agricultural high school, and schools copied after it, in the University of Nebraska and in the University of Maine, also, have shown that agricultural education has passed the experimental stage and is an assured success. The system of agricultural colleges started by Senator Hays in his and grant bill of 1862 has won a most important place in American education."

Possibilities Are Great.

The farm school accommodating the pupils hauled to it at public expense from an area five miles square, with its ten acres of land, and its four-room schoolhouse; its cottage for principal; shelter belts of trees; its fields, gardens, orchards, playgrounds and other things needed by a principal who teaches some agriculture and an assistant principal trained in teaching home economics; this kind of a school is full of unheard-of possibilities.

The course of study can be extended two years beyond the present, thus supplying the children with the first two years of high school work before they leave the parental roof. And four teachers can fairly compass the work for the 120 or 150 pupils. The agriculture and the home economics, instead of hurrying the work in the common studies, will greatly assist it. The technical and industrial studies do more than teach of books; they lead to something; they induce the pupil to appreciate the modern form of the old agriculture, "the earth belongs to him who hustles while he waits."

The farm school can be articulated most happily with the agricultural high school. The farm boys and girls can graduate in an agricultural high school by being away from home for only a few days. The course of study of this school can also be articulated with the city high schools, since most of their work consists of general studies, and since the agricultural and home economic studies are just as educational, as well as more practical, as are the studies in our city high school courses; students can go from the sophomore year of the city high school to the junior year in the city high school.

Benefits to Be Derived.

"Thousands of students who wish to enter some city vocation have the opportunity to do so. In fact, the farm school as thus outlined, is nearly as great a benefit to the boy and girl who wishes to go into the city, as the one who wishes to remain on the farm."

"This scheme will do more to articulate the entire school system into a complete and harmonious unit than anything else that has been suggested; and further, the young people who go to the country homes with this better preparation will be even more useful than are those vigorous people who now come from the country to city life and enrich it with their physical, mental and moral energy."

"There is no doubt but that the proportion of our whole people engaged in farming is not only 35 per cent, but will be still further reduced, probably to 25 per cent. These 10 per cent going from the farms to the cities will have a good influence in proportion to their training and ability. The state can see appropriately help to build farm schools as a university, or as a state capitol."

State Should Act.

"If the state would put a thousand dollars into each of 1,500 consolidated farm schools, only 1,500,000 would pay the bill, or one-third the cost of the state capitol. Most educators and persons interested in the welfare of our farmers do not realize that the country schools are not getting their fair share of the great and growing school fund of the state of Minnesota."

"This system of farm schools would bring to the agricultural school at St. Anthony Park a very large number of students for the junior and senior years of its work, probably more than can be accommodated in that institution without making it so large as to be unwieldy."

With enlarged facilities in agricultural high schools, there would be a much larger number who would go on with the collegiate course in agriculture in the university. Supporting the students in agricultural high schools
