MONDELL CALLS ON ENGINEER BOARD

Irrigation Schemes for Wyoming Urged by Congressman and a Delegation.

Special to The Journal.

Billings, Mont., May 12.—A delegation of Wyoming ranchmen, headed by Congressman W. F. Mondell, arrived in Billings today and presented a proposition to the board of consulting engineers of the United States Irrigation service, now in session in Billings, for the proposed irrigation of Gray Bull valley in the Big Horn country.

Under the water right system now in vogue, the 2,000 settlers of this valley assert that the surplus of water in the high season goes to waste and that during the irrigation season there is not enough water to supply the needs of the valley.

The government has already made two preliminary examinations in this valley and located two sites for great storage reservoirs. These reservoirs will necessitate the construction of dams about one hundred feet high and will increase the acreage of irrigated land from 30,000 to 200,000 acres under proper conservation. Settlers of Gray Bull valley held a mass meeting on April 12 and enlisted the aid of Congressman Mondell to head the delegation.

Another from Carbon County.

Another delegation from Carbon County is here today attending the session of the board of consulting engineers of the United States Irrigation service. This delegation is headed by John Wade, Carbon County, and Big Horn County, Wyoming. A preliminary survey has already been made by State Engineer John Wade.

The board of engineers will be in session all the week and is now considering the proposed irrigation project in Wyoming.

From here, A. P. Davis of Washington, D. C., assistant engineer, goes to Denver to let the contract for the construction of the interstate canal on North Platte river. H. A. Wiley, consulting engineer, goes to Idaho to take charge of several projects, and H. N. Savage, supervising engineer, and C. E. Grunsky, chief consulting engineer, will make a tour of inspection in Montana, with special reference to the Milk river project.

This is the first important meeting of the board of engineers since Billings has been made the headquarters for the reclamation service in the northwest.

Huntley Flats to Be Reclaimed.

Bids are advertised for the construction of a great canal to reclaim 35,000 acres of the Huntley flats in the Crow reservation, a few miles east of Billings, and the contract will be let June 15. This is the first of the great irrigation projects in the northwest that will be completed, the work being crowded in order to have everything ready for the settlers when the great seeded strip is thrown open.

The contract for the machinery for the new million dollar beet sugar factory that was recently burned here has been let to the firm of Cleveland, Ohio. Work will begin about June 1. In addition to these great projects, the Billings Land and Irrigation company is engaged in constructing a canal, reclaiming 40,000 acres of the Billings bench.

HIS BURNING LOVE IS AKIN TO PAIN

Quality of His Anguish Changed Now, for She Sues for Breach of Promise.

New York Sun Special Service.

Pittsburg, May 12.—Sharp and decisive were the clashes today in the Steiner-Gibney breach of promise suit in the United States court, where Miss Edith Gibney of St. Louis, who is suing for $50,000. The prosecution unexpectedly rested at noon after reading about 5,000 words of burning love letters from Steiner to Miss Gibney when he was engaged to marry her.

The letters of Miss Gibney to Steiner, which were read today, but not one-tenth of those in the hands of the plaintiff's attorney. One, dated Sept. 15, 1903, reads:

He Couldn't Sleep.

It is 2 a.m., dearest. I cannot sleep. Have gentle compassion on me. Do not judge me ill. Hear my story. Your letters that come to me each day bringing with them undisguised proof of your unutterable belief in me and exalting my very incarnation of love, together with a perfect chaos of emotion and to a fierce conflict in my mind. I am like one possessed and I know neither rest of body nor spirit. Good God, that I should come to love a woman with the passion and with the depth of my soul as I love you. If this be love, dearest, it is akin to pain. Pain finds us revolting against ill that is and the cause thereof indiscriminately.

Would Fly to Her.

I am burning to possess you with a desire that calm, rational argument cannot assuage. Why cannot I fly to you and, casting around you the spell of my visions, encircle you in my arms and carry you off to that castle in Spain existing now only in imagination, but which some day shall find a place in reality and that shall prove a very heaven to our troubled longing and like a fortress shall breathe with the arms of love, the very strength of which shall serve to repel aught but the contentment of a perfect satisfaction. You. And I look to you with the same eager hope that men look for salvation. I am in agony of impatience and angry with the love in my heart that it can't perform miracles. The trouble and the longing in me are almost more than I can bear. It is not the future I fear, but the present.

Millennium Beaten a Mile.

My love for you is so strong and the conviction of it so firm, that I know we shall be united in a bondage as everlasting as happy that the millennium of heaven will not compare, and just as surely as the sun rises this day and God gives us light. The present, however, I fear, the everlasting present, that hangs on with the length of a geologic age and torments with its hopes and its desires and its aspirations all borrowed without leave from that time to come and in the possession of which it finds itself uneasy and restless as the thief with that which is not his.

Has the Other Girls Wondering.

The girls here think it is a subject of much wonder that you and I should write each other daily. They say to me: "What in the world can you ever find to write so much about?" I tell them you are interested in the political article in "Kamachatka," and that you love nothing better than to argue on the theories of the nebular hypothesis and like subjects which they, of course, swallow.

"WRONG NUMBER" CALL SCARED AWAY BANDITS

New York Sun Special Service.

Fruita, Col., May 12.—A mistake by Miss Nellie Sperry, the night telephone operator, who rang up the First National bank early today, instead of the city marshal, prevented the bank from being robbed of $15,000, and also prevented the capture of the safe crackers. The robbers first blew the safe of the Fruita Mercantile company, securing $700. Then they went to the bank, blew off the outer door of the big safe and were about to shatter the inner steel plate when the telephone rang, frightening them away.

A roomer near the bank had seen the flash of a dark lantern in the back, and reported it to the telephone office, with a request that the marshal be summoned. The girl became scared and rang up the wrong number.
